Roosevelt Signals 'Go' On Labor Legislation

Cooling-Off Period, With Arbitration Club, 'Consensus' at White House Parley

COLLAPSE OF TALKS to avert rail strike is reported as walk-out of machinists ties up defense work in St. Louis area. Page 6.

Night Session

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt last night gave his official approval to a temperate program of labor legislation starting almost immediately in the House—details to be worked out in Congress.

The White House "go ahead" was given at a two and one-half hour night conference between the President, Labor Department representatives, Democratic and Republican House leaders and eight other picked legislators.

House Majority Leader John W. McCormack told reporters that it was the "consensus" of those present that the forthcoming legislation should provide for a "reasonable" waiting period, or period of sanity, before strikes could be called in defense industries.

No Commitments
McCormack said it also was the "pretty general" view of those present that any legislation enacted should give the President power to order arbitration if negotiation, conciliation and mediation steps failed.

The House majority leader said there was no binding agreement on details or on any one of a number of plans discussed.

There was no commitment on any bill, House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., added. The Democratic and Republican House leaders received reporters just inside the White House door, where newsmen had been invited for warmth by Wilson Searles, assistant usher.

'Temperance' Stressed
"We reviewed about 57 varieties of labor legislation," said Martin. "We finally decided to take up the question in the House immediately after the House disposes of the pending price-control measure."

It was the first White House "green light" for legislative action to prevent labor slowdowns in defense industries.

Soldier Misreads Signal, Jumps Out Of Plane Over N.Y.

New York, Nov. 24 (AP)—Corpl. Albert Moxley, 24, misinterpreting the signal of a superior, who was only pointing out the sights, jumped from an Army training plane tonight and escaped with only minor injuries when his parachute caught on the cornice of a home in Brooklyn, smashing him against a second-story window.

After Moxley jumped, when the plane was 4500 feet above the Statue of Liberty, the pilot, Second Lieut. John A. Kelting, brought the plane back to Mitchell Field. A curt report issued by the operations office at the field said the wind distorted Kelting's word and before he could stop Corpl. Moxley, he had jumped.

Loveless Believed Victim of Ambush

Burglars Surprised By Return of Lawyer May Have Slain Him

An accumulation of clues last night indicated that Ward Loveless, Washington attorney whose bullet-pierced body was found yesterday morning stuffed in a closet of his Loudoun County (Va.) farm home, was ambushed and slain in the home.

Both District and Virginia investigators were of the belief that the 51-year-old lawyer and country squire was murdered by two burglars, whom he surprised looting his estate, or by two enemies waiting there to pay off a grudge.

Close associates of the tax specialist asserted that as far as they knew Loveless had no enemies, that he was generally well liked by friends and neighbors, but Virginia officials revealed that only last week the wealthy lawyer-farmer had sought to purchase a gun.

Wanted, Auto Missing
On the other hand, Loveless was known to carry large sums of money with him, and his wallet was missing. Also missing was one of Loveless' two cars. An upstairs bureau had been ransacked.

Investigators, including ace District detectives called into the case, turned to the ambush theory after questioning two women who had joined Loveless in a party here Sunday night. From their testimony, which explained Loveless' movements up to Sunday night, police officials felt reasonably sure that Loveless had returned alone early Monday to his estate at Peon Springs, seven miles northwest of Leesburg.

Woman's Watch, Gloves Found

Belief that there were at least two slayers grew from evidences of a violent struggle in the house, numerous fingerprints, and bullets of two different calibers lodged in the victim's body.

Three major clues, which did not tie in well with the ambush theory.

U. S. Hunting Key Nazi Agent Probe Witness

Ralph Townsend Fails to Appear Before Grand Jury

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

A Nation-wide hunt was on last night for Ralph Townsend, anti-interventionist writer and key witness in the special grand jury investigation of German agents.

Townsend was mysteriously missing yesterday, when he was scheduled to testify before the special grand jury.

A month ago Townsend was given the closely guarded, secretly compiled master mailing list of the anti-interventionists, according to Beattie Feagin, promotion manager of Scribner's Commentator.

Lawyers for Scribner's said yesterday, however, that his whereabouts were "unknown" and they could not produce him as agreed.

Other developments in the inquiry were:

Senate and House Judiciary Committees speeded consideration of a bill to put sharp teeth in the law requiring foreign agents to register with American authorities.

Special prosecutors of the Department of Justice propaganda squad said they would seek a trial December 8, if Representative Hamilton Fish's secretary, George Hill, loses his technical attack on the perjury indictment against him.

National officers of the Steuben Society, a large handler of franked mail, were questioned before the special grand jury.

Miss Feagin testified that a copy of a mammoth mailing list, compiled by Scribner's, was given to her.

Don't Deny Child's Faith in Santa, First Lady Says

Philadelphia, Nov. 24 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt says she believes in telling the whitest lie of them all—the universal fib about Santa Claus. Fairy stories are permissible, too, she writes in the Ladies Home Journal.

"I certainly do believe in telling children to believe in Santa Claus," she said. "They learn soon enough that Santa Claus is mother or father or some other kind person. Why not let them have the joy of believing that Santa Claus does come to all children and that he is such a jolly old saint?"

Chest Needs Contributions Of 80,000 U. S. Employees

Contributions from more than 80,000 Government workers who have not yet given to the Community Chest, are needed for success in raising two million dollars to clothe, feed, and care for Washington's sick and needy in 1942, officials stated yesterday.

At yesterday's report meeting in the Willard Hotel, campaign workers reported total pledges of $1,101,272.37, more than half the goal.

Lagging behind the three other solicitation units was the Federal Government unit, which has collected $431,246.18, or 51 per cent of its goal. This group, largest of the four units, must raise $338,000 to fill its quota.

"Failure of thousands of Federal Government workers to give to the campaign is a serious and immediate problem," said Herbert L. Willett, Jr., the Chest's director.

"However, if these workers will pull with us, it is perfectly possible to reach our goal Thursday, as planned. I am sure that it is the mechanics of collection rather than their mental attitude which is standing in the way," he stated.

Pledges from other solicitation units reported yesterday are as follows: District Government Unit, $44,645.93, or 80.3 per cent of quota; Group Solicitation Unit, $387,178.35, or 97.1 per cent of quota, and Metropolitan Unit, $238,201, or 58.09 per cent of quota. Their combined contributions total $5.06 per cent of

U.S. Occupying Dutch Guiana; Titanic Battle Rages in Libya; Moscow Faces Greatest Peril

Massed Tanks Batter Capital's Second Lines Of Defense

By the Associated Press

Kuibyshev, Russia, Nov. 24.—The Red army was fighting one of the most critical battles of its history tonight against the onrush of massed Nazi tanks and men which battered at Moscow's second lines of defense and pierced within 50 miles of the capital.

The fate of Moscow admittedly was at stake. Russians described the danger as the greatest in the five months of war.

In a desperate attempt to ease the pressure on the central front they reported seizing the initiative at the northern and southern flanks with what they declared was their greatest counteroffensive.

Northwest of the Don River port of Rostov, military dispatches said 7000 German dead were piled along a 70-mile battlefield where the Germans had been shoved back as much as 37 miles.

Rail Line City Recaptured

Rostov (which the German high command declared last Saturday was firmly in Axis hands) was described as the scene of continuing street fighting as its garrison held key points against strong tank attacks.

Russian war reports said that southeast of Leningrad the rail line city of Malaya Vishera had been recaptured by the Russian counter-attack which pushed German troops back to the outskirts of another important town. The Germans also were said to have lost several other communities west of the Volkhov River defense line.

(A Moscow dispatch received in London said 3000 officers and men in the 257th and 115th German infantry regiments had been smashed completely on the Leningrad front.)

Hit With Force
One of the greatest of the new dangers of the Moscow front developed at Klin, 50 miles north of the capital and midway between Moscow and Kalinin.

It was here that the Germans, striking with terrific force, were said to have driven a wedge into Russian defenses in the closest approach to the capital yet reported in Russian dispatches.

(The Germans declared they had smashed to approximately 31 miles from Moscow in this region.)

At both sides of the wedge, around Kalinin and Volokolamsk, the Red army reported holding on doggedly.

Elsewhere along the Moscow arc of defense, however, the Russians were pushed back inch by inch under the weight of the attacking force, which military observers here

British Right Locked in Bitter 48-Hour Fight; Gambut Falls

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Nov. 24.—The British right was locked in a decisive battle tonight with Axis forces in a 1800-square mile area, claiming the capture of the important Axis supply center of Gambut in the course of that terrible struggle, while far to the south the imperial left was racing westward in a vast arc apparently intended to cut off all northern Libya.

The latter column, loosed originally from Giarabub, was acknowledged by the Axis to have driven forward some 200 miles, capturing an Italian garrison north of Gialo Oasis, and appeared to be meeting little opposition in a grand maneuver of encirclement headed for the Gulf of Sirte to cut the coastal Allies' Split Up route of exit to western Libya.

The master plan, it appeared, was to draw a line of men and steel across the southern end of the entire Libyan hump and thus leave the eastern Axis forces of the German Gen. Erwin Rommel—which already were declared to be cut into four or more sections—with no prospect of reinforcement or supplies save through highly hazardous air and sea transport.

But while this thrust was moving at a great rate through the silent wastes of the south, the British right was involved in such a showdown as desert warfare had never before seen.

Gambut, about half way to the British garrison of Tobruk on the Mediterranean shore, was stormed and overrun by New Zealanders, the British command announced, in a continuation of the coastal drive that already had wrested Bardia from the Germans and Italians.

No Letup for 48 Hours
From Gambut all the way eastward to the vicinity of Rezegh, 10 miles below Tobruk, the forward British columns were gambling with every weapon at hand to break Rommel's back and smash the pride of his army—the heavy mechanized forces.

Both sides were losing heavily in this battlefield of great decision and as tank strength declined, British infantrymen—Englishmen, South Africans, New Zealanders—armed with Bren guns charged the Axis positions.

"There is an amazing battle going on in an area 40 by 40 miles," the British military spokesman summed up, "and there are no regular lines and no telephone communications."

"This battle," said the British command itself, "which has been

Supreme Court Throws Out California Law Barring 'Okies'

By William R. Spear
Associated Press Staff Writer

The Supreme Court laid down the doctrine yesterday that relief to the needy and interstate migration are matters of national concern and struck down an effort by California to deal independently with the problem.

But sharing interest with the decision itself was a rebuke to the court delivered by its newest member, Justice Jackson, in a separate opinion which contended that the tribunal consistently had failed to uphold the privileges of individual citizens against State abridgment.

The court held unconstitutional a so-called "anti-Okie" law which made it a misdemeanor to help an indigent of another State to enter California, which has comparatively high relief benefits and old-age pensions. A score of other States have similar statutes.

Justice Byrnes, writing his first opinion since his appointment last summer, delivered the majority decision. He based the ruling solely on the ground that California's action violated the constitutional provision which gives Congress the right to regulate interstate commerce and said that it therefore was unnecessary to deal with other constitutional considerations.

There was no dissent as to the result, but four justices took exception to the question. The primary point in their view, was that the indigent involved in the case, Frank Duncan, of Spur, Tex., was a citizen of the United States and that his citizenship gave him the right to go freely from State to State. No condition of poverty, they said, could affect this right.

Justice Douglas wrote a separate concurring opinion on this point, in which Justice Black and Murphy joined, and Jackson wrote another which was far more outspoken.

Jackson declared that the hope of imparting "vitality" to American citizenship through the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution "soon shriveled in the process of judicial interpretation."

The fourteenth amendment provides that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

"For nearly three-quarters of a century," Jackson wrote, "this court

Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, was understood last night to have reached a "basis of negotiation" in his talks with Saburo Kurosu, Japan's special envoy to the United States, and Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura, the Japanese Ambassador, looking toward a limited agreement with Japan on Pacific problems.

In face of the apparent impossibility of reaching a general Pacific settlement due to fundamental differences in the views of the two countries, it is learned that Hull's latest talks with the Japanese Envoys have turned to consideration of a limited accord which would serve to ease American-Japanese tension and prevent a war from breaking out in the Pacific.

Hull also held a second talk yesterday with the envoys of Britain, Australia, the Netherlands and China, in conjunction with the American-Japanese negotiations which was punctuated with receipt of word that the American Consulate at Saigon, Indo-China, was wrecked Sunday night by a bomb which had been placed on the floor just outside the office entrance.

The State Department had no information as to the perpetrator of See PACIFIC, Page 2, Column 6.

Badly Split House Debates Price Control

Even the Democrats Unable to Agree as Discussion Opens

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

A House troubled by one of the most controversial pieces of legislation of the session yesterday moved uncertainly through the first day's debate on the price bill, with Democrats split on the major issue and Republicans as yet unwilling to line up on either side.

The issue lay for the moment between a plan for restricting wages, prices and rents in an "over-all" attack on inflation, whose chief proponent is a 33-year-old Democrat from Tennessee, and a system calling for selective price restraints and backed by the full power of the Administration.

It could be decided by the minority membership, but there were indications last night that the Republicans, due to consider the problem in a party conference tomorrow morning, might decide to reject the bill.

Canadians Sink U-Boat, Capture 47 Crew Members

Ottawa, Nov. 24 (AP)—A German submarine was sunk recently in the North Atlantic by two Canadian corvettes, which rescued and imprisoned its 47 surviving crewmen, the navy ministry announced tonight.

The sinking was credited to teamwork by the corvettes Chambly and Moosejaw, apparently while on convoy duty.

The Chambly forced the U-boat to the surface with depth charges and its crew abandoned ship after the Moosejaw fired but a single round.

American Troops Also May Protect French Colonies In Hemisphere

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

American troops were ordered yesterday to take over protection of Dutch Guiana amid indications the United States soon may move into French and other Dutch possessions in the Western Hemisphere.

A White House announcement disclosed the dispatch of an "Army contingent" to the Netherlands colony on the northeastern coast of South America, saying that it was to protect the vital bauxite mines there, source of 60 per cent of the ore used in making aluminum in the United States.

Although the announcement did not specify what danger threatened the mines, other sources said that sabotage was feared. They pointed, in this connection, to persistent reports that the Nazis have been active in French Guiana, next door neighbor to the Netherlands possession.

For Hemisphere Defense

Establishment of strong American forces adjoining the Vichy dominated French colony should not only insure against any Nazi coup directed at the mines, it was stated, but help guard against other German activity aimed at this Hemisphere.

It led to renewed talk that United States troops might be sent to take over French possessions in the New World in the light of the closer cooperation between France and Berlin. Chairman Tom Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee predicted such possible action in a statement approving the present move.

"I think we shall have to take over Martinique (in the Caribbean) and French Guiana if Vichy continues to succumb to Nazi influence," he declared.

Dutch Fully Approve
Occupation of the Dutch colony also provides the United States with another base of operations for hemisphere defense, closer to the important "hump" of Brazil than present American military forces.

It is some 250 miles south and east of the American air base near Georgetown, British Guiana, a location leased to the United States under the destroyer deal of last year.

Lindbergh to Seek Seat in Senate, Stassen Quoted

New Orleans, Nov. 24 (AP)—The New Orleans Item today quoted Gov. Stassen of Minnesota as saying in an interview that Charles A. Lindbergh would run for the United States Senate in Minnesota next year and be defeated by Senator Joe Ball, 36, Republican.

Later Stassen told the Associated Press that while there had been a lot of talk of Lindbergh trying for the Senate either as an independent, Farmer Laborite or Republican, "so far no one seems to know definitely if he will make the race or not."

Stassen said Lindbergh would have to move his residence from New Jersey to Minnesota six months before the September, 1942, primary, in order to make the race. Lindbergh, vigorous critic of the Administration's foreign policy, lived a long time at Little Falls, Minn.

Panamanian Chief Claims Presidency

By the Associated Press
Call, Colombia, Nov. 24.—Anibal Rios, third Vice President of Panama in the overthrown government of Dr. Arnaldo Arias, claimed tonight he was the rightful and constitutional President of the republic, and "come what may, I am going to serve."

Rios expressed surprise when informed that 11 of his friends had been arrested in Panama for "preparing to undertake a subversive movement," and added that he had heard of no such movement. He voiced his claim of succession to the Panamanian Presidency on his arrival here from Lima, where he had served as his country's minister to Peru until he was ousted November 8 by Panama's pro-German coup government headed by Ricardo Adolfo de la Guardia.

Rios, a former minister of education and agriculture, based his claim to the presidency on the ground that the first two vice presidents, Jose Pezet and Ernesto Jaen Guardia, waived their claims to the office after the coup which deposed Arias, now exiled in Mexico.

"I await word from my friends in Panama," said Rios.

Rios' wife went on to Panama aboard the liner Santa Clara which had brought them to Colombia.

Commenting on accusations of the Axis powers that the United States was responsible for the overthrow of the Arias regime in Panama, Rios said:

"I think sincerely that the men directing the Government of the United States have a clear conscience in their responsibility for respecting rights of countries like ours which always gives the United States its best cooperation for defense of our common interests."

Panama, Nov. 24 (AP)—The 7-week-old government of President Ricardo Adolfo de la Guardia announced today that it had arrested 11 friends of "Third Vice President Anibal Rios" after having proved that they were preparing to undertake a subversive movement.

Dutch Guiana Is Largest U. S. Foreign Source of Bauxite

By sending troops to tropical Surinam (Dutch Guiana), the United States has taken steps to guard its largest foreign source of bauxite, the ore used in making aluminum, says a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

"Although France and Hungary were the largest peacetime producers of bauxite," the bulletin adds, "Surinam and her South American neighbor, British Guiana, have greatly increased their output in the last two years. Together, these two countries contain the most productive mines in the Western Hemisphere."

Bauxite Accessible
"In 1940, freighters carried more than 585,000 metric tons of Surinam bauxite to New Orleans, Mobile, and other United States ports. That was almost the entire supply from the Netherlands. The United States itself mined only about 446,000 metric tons, with Arkansas leading in production."

"Bauxite mining has given new life and importance to Surinam, which previously had been a sleepy land of savannas and jungles. Javanese and Hindu laborers and primitive bush Negroes. Situated on the northeast coast of South America it lies between British Guiana on the west and French Guiana on the east. "Bauxite production has developed largely because the mines lie near navigable streams, chiefly the Cottica, Para, and Surinam Rivers. Railroads have been built to some of the mining camps in the interior, which formerly could be reached only by water. The deposits lie near the surface, so that the ore is taken from open pits."

Five Times Size of Holland
"The ore shipments recently have accounted for two-thirds of Surinam's exports. Sugar, bananas, rice, coffee, hardwoods, rum and molasses are the other leading products, coming chiefly from the lowlands near the 240-mile Atlantic Coast. Much of this area is below sea level and has to be diked and artificially drained. Gold once was the principal mineral product, but the accessible deposits have been thoroughly worked."

year. From these locations, American naval, land and air forces could move quickly to forestall an Axis move from Africa against Brazil.

The French African port of Dakar is but 700 miles from the hump of Brazil, and there has been fear that Vichy might turn over its strong base there to the Nazis.

The White House announcement emphasized that the action was taken with the full approval of the Netherlands government, and of Brazil, which borders Dutch Guiana on the south. The American troops will cooperate with local Netherlands forces in protecting the bauxite mines, it was said.

The statement, read by Stephen Early, secretary to President, declared that "in normal circumstances" the Netherlands government would draw on its army in the Dutch East Indies to strengthen the defenses of its American colony.

In view, however, of the present situation in the southwestern Pacific, it is thought inadvisable to follow that course," the White House pronouncement added.

In London, Premier Gerbrandy of Queen Wilhelmina's Netherlands government in exile, stressed this phase of the step, and declared that "there is no doubt whatsoever" that in the event of aggression in the southwestern Pacific, "cooperation between Australia, Great Britain, North America and the Netherlands will be complete."

Gerbrandy's announcement, carried by the Associated Press, was taken to mean that the protection of other Netherlands territory in the Western Hemisphere may also devolve on the United States. Besides Surinam—Dutch name for Netherlands Guiana—Queen Wilhelmina rules over Curacao and Aruba Islands, off the north coast of Venezuela, where large oil refineries are located.

Both the Netherlands and United States announcements make plain that the protective occupation was for the duration of the war only.

"This contingent will, of course, be withdrawn as soon as the present danger to the mines is removed and at the latest upon the conclusion of hostilities," the White House said.

Neither the White House or the War Department would discuss the size of the force sent to Paramaribo, main seaport of Dutch Guiana, or other details of the move. It was indicated, however, that they were drawn from Trinidad, one of the Caribbean bases acquired from Great Britain last year.

The Associated Press quoted "usually well-informed quarters" in Rio de Janeiro as understanding that about two thousand American troops will be landed in Surinam. Brazil is a party to the protective occupation of the Dutch colony, and Both the Washington and Rio de Janeiro announcements mentioned Brazil's cooperation in the action and declared that the latter nation "will contribute to the common aim by exercising an especial measure of military vigilance in the frontier zone adjacent to Surinam."

Brazil also will send a military mission to Paramaribo, the White House stated, to "exchange information and concert all other steps on the basis indicated to assure maximum efficiency of the safety measures thus being jointly undertaken by the Brazilian, United States and Netherlands forces."

"At the same time," it was added, "the Government of the United States has notified the governments of the American republics of the foregoing arrangements which have been reached in the interests of all."

The bauxite mines which the White House declared vital to the Nations "actively resisting aggression," produced 615,484 metric tons of ore in 1940. This year, an expansion of activity is expected to result in an output of one million tons.

Sympathizers of Gen. Charles de Gaulle, Free French leader, commented that "French Guiana, like Martinique, also a Vichy partisan, exists only because the United States wills it."

"French colonies in the Western Hemisphere are absolutely dependent for their livelihood on the dollar exchange," one such source said. "Without United States trade their existence would be unbearable, and with sizeable numbers of American soldiers next door to French Guiana existence there (next door) may be considerably more bearable than in it."

French Africa, Spain Refused Exports
The United States Economic Defense Board last night clamped a lid on exports to French colony possessions in Northern Africa, and to Spain and its possessions.

The board issued orders revoking all outstanding general and individual export licenses for exportations to Algeria, French Morocco and Tunis (Tunisia).

At the same time all licenses authorizing exportation of petroleum products to Spain and its possessions, and to Tangier, Spanish-controlled colony in Northwest Africa, were revoked.

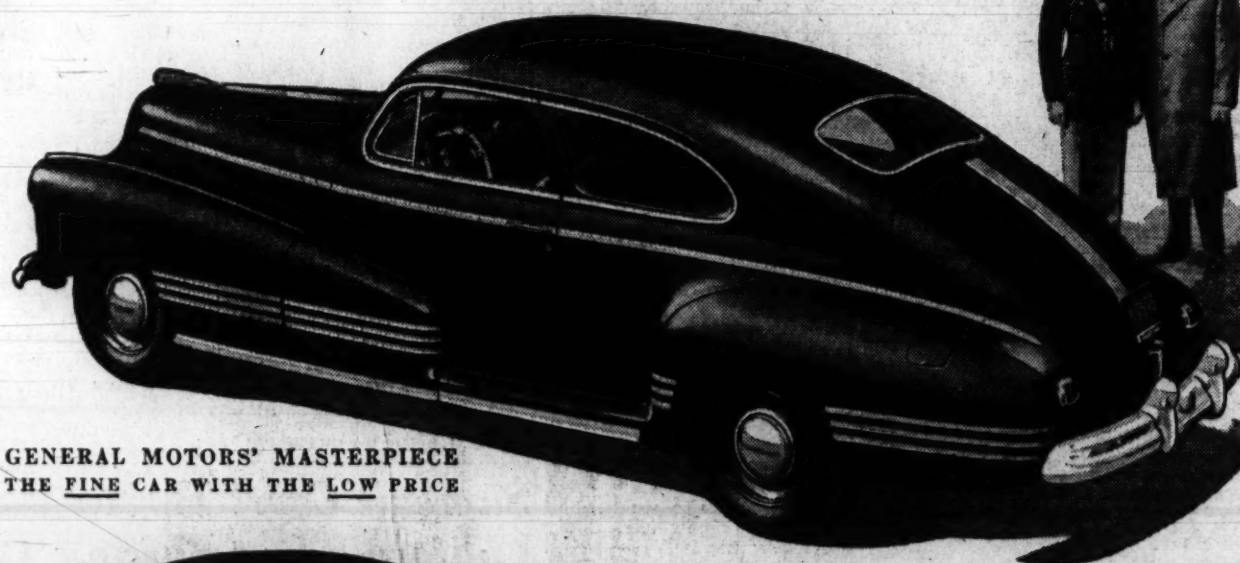

New, individual licenses for each shipment must be obtained for any further exports of any articles and materials to the French colonies, or petroleum products to Spain, its possessions or colonies, the board announced.

ARMY TO STAND GUARD OVER DUTCH GUIANA.—The White House announced yesterday that United States Army troops would be sent to Dutch Guiana to "assure" protection of bauxite mines there. Confirmation that the American soldiers would stand guard came later from the Netherlands government in London, with the implication that United States troops might also take over other Dutch possessions in the Western Hemisphere, possibly, the Curacao Island group, off the north coast of Venezuela

States and Netherlands forces." "At the same time," it was added, "the Government of the United States has notified the governments of the American republics of the foregoing arrangements which have been reached in the interests of all."

Owners of lowest-priced cars have learned it's wise to invest a little more and get a Pontiac

GENERAL MOTORS' MASTERPIECE
THE FINE CAR WITH THE LOW PRICE

NO WONDER OWNERS of lowest-priced cars in all parts of the country are again switching to Pontiac this year. They've learned that Pontiac not only costs no more to own and operate, but also they're paying no more in the long run. They're simply investing a little more because they've found Pontiac owners get the few extra dollars they pay back again at trade-in time—thanks to Pontiac's great reputation for dependability and the tremendous demand for it as a used car.

And, in times like these, aren't dependability and long life the two things you want most in a car? They're still yours in Pontiac because Pontiac pistons, bearings, crankshafts and other vital parts are unchanged in 1942. This has been accomplished without interfering with defense needs.

See this new Pontiac today. Check local delivered prices and see how close to lowest-priced cars Pontiac prices really are! Your present car may cover part or all of the down payment on a 1942 Pontiac. The balance may be paid in monthly installments.

Two Great Plants for Defense Work Only
Pontiac has two great plants—one in production, the other being rushed to completion—devoted solely to Defense: building rapid-fire cannon for the U. S. Navy. Thousands of Pontiac skilled craftsmen are now at work turning out this cannon which naval authorities say is "the most effective weapon of its size ever produced."

The only changes that have been made in the 1942 Pontiac are improvements. For example, Pontiac's exclusive built-in oil cleaner. It is good for the lifetime of the car—requires no new "cartridges" to keep oil clean and pure. In 1942 its efficiency has been increased from two to three times over that of last year's design.

Tokyo Sends Note To Mission Here

Vital to U. S. A. Free French Forces Get Lease Aid

New York, Nov. 24 (AP).—The Free French delegation in the United States announced today that President Roosevelt had authorized lend-lease aid to the Free French forces of Gen. Charles de Gaulle, on the ground that territory controlled by them "is vital to the defense of the United States."

The President, in a letter to E. R. Stettinius, jr., lend-lease administrator, as released by the Free French delegation, said:

"... In order to enable you to arrange for lend-lease aid to the Free French volunteer forces (Free French) by way of retransfer from his majesty's government in the United Kingdom or their allies, I hereby find that the defense of any French territory under the control of the Free French forces is vital to the defense of the United States."

State Department officials last night confirmed a report from Free French sources to the effect that President Roosevelt had approved lend-lease aid to Free French forces through retransfer of war materials delivered to Britain.

[The department said the move implied no unusual expansion of the President's lend-lease policy, pointing out that the Lend-Lease Act authorizes him to make such commitments when he deems it vital to the defense of the United States. It was added that the Free French forces already had been receiving some aid.—Editor's note.]

Final Link Opens Today Completing Rock Creek Sewer

The final link in the 3½ million dollar Rock Creek diversion sewer, a Federal Works Agency project, will be opened officially at 2 p. m. today.

An inspection tour headed by FWA and FWA officials, and including Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz, will precede the opening. The final section cost $1,700,000.

The entire sewer begins in Piney Branch Valley near Sixteenth Street Northwest with its southern terminus at P Street just west of Twenty-second Street Northwest.

Today's inspection will cover the last section which extends from the lower end of the line northward to Taft Bridge. All but this final link now is in operation.

Principal function of the new sewer is to prevent overflows into Rock Creek during heavy rains.

New Development In Negotiations Expected to Result

By the Associated Press

Tokyo, Nov. 24.—The Japanese foreign office has sent a new communication to its mission negotiating with the United States Government in Washington, and a new development is expected "very shortly," Domei, the authoritative Japanese news agency, said tonight.

There was no immediate indication as to the nature of the communication, and Domei warned that optimism was not warranted.

It was understood that the foreign office regarded its message to the Japanese delegates as urgent.

Tokyo Hopes for Best, Prepares for Worst

Tokyo, Nov. 24.—Although the formal announcement of the foreign office that the liner Tatuta Maru would sail for Los Angeles and Balboa before the end of the month and various other indications from Washington as well as Tokyo revived hopes of a successful conclusion to the American-Japanese negotiations, the Japanese government is continuing to speed up its creation of a military-economic-financial war time structure in preparation for the worst.

"The international situation surrounding Japan," Premier General Hideki Tojo told a conference of prefectural governors called for that purpose, "is so grave that the country is now at the crossroads to rise or fall; a situation which it has not experienced in all of its 2000-year history. This is a test for the Japanese nation."

"In dealing with this situation the government is making full preparation, through both internal and external measures, to promote the nation's fortune—prosperity or a break through the crisis by overcoming all difficulties with unflinching determination on the basis of fixed and immutable national policies."

General Tojo appealed for an iron-bound unity between the government and the people in terms which the official news agency, Domei, interpreted as an exhortation to the people to rely implicitly on the government's discretion in carrying out the national policies.

In the same vein Maj. Gen. Akira Muto of the war office in reviewing the military situation in China expressed the determination of the fighting forces to "face with the greatest of resolution whatever eventualities may arise."

U. S. Gunboats Are Leaving China Waters

By the Associated Press

Shanghai, Nov. 24.—The United States gunboat Wake left Hankow for Shanghai today, beginning the withdrawal of the American Navy's Yangtze River patrol between Shanghai and Hankow.

The 370-ton Wake was the last Occidental guardship left at Hankow. United States naval authorities there closed their warehouse and liquidated the stocks. Two other gunboats have been stationed in the Yangtze below Hankow; presumably they will move down river shortly.

About 50 Americans—35 of them missionaries—remained in Hankow. Evacuation of United States naval forces at Shanghai, including Marines, appeared tonight to be near execution following upon President Roosevelt's order earlier this month to the Marines to retire from China.

The first detachment of Marines was expected to leave Shanghai Wednesday and the last of them Sunday. Withdrawal of the naval patrol appeared likely to be effected the last of this week.

Civilian police are expected to take up policing of the section of Yangtze Gorges.

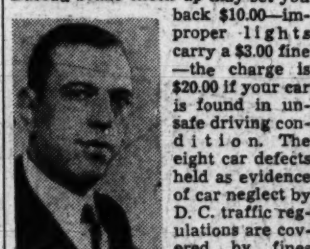

The International Settlement which the Marines have been guarding. One other American gunboat, the Tutuila, appeared stranded at Chungking by the mining of the British officials announced that the second and last ship, the Minghang, would arrive December 3 from Hongkong to evacuate British who desired to go to Australia.

Car Care

By Ed Carl
A Faulty Car May Get You Into Traffic Troubles

From now on traffic violations will cost motorists extra money if their cars show need of repair. A Traffic Bureau brake check-up may set you back $10.00—improper lights carry a $3.00 fine—the charge is $20.00 if your car is found in unsafe driving condition. The eight car defects held as evidence of car neglect by D. C. traffic regulations are covered by fines totaling $68.00—all eight can be corrected by Call Carl, Washington's "Little Detroit," for only $5.00. Have these minor repairs made now before ice-guttered streets make driving doubly dangerous and encourage costly traffic troubles. And, remember, there'll be no more Audi-Freeze after Call Carl's present reserve supply is gone—Drive in—day or night—at Brightwood, Northeast or Downtown.

and all," he said. He attributed the loss of all the ship's officers to the fact the torpedo hit the forward half of the ship, near the bridge and officers' quarters. His station in the engine room is nearer the stern.

The gunners' mate on the destroyer's No. 6 gun told him that none of the officers nor anyone else in the forward part of the ship had been saved and that he was in command.

"We lowered the life raft and then, not knowing whether we would be in contact with any other ship or how long we would be there, we jumped overboard," Bergstresser said.

"We had six rafts on the ship, but three were carried away as well as the crew life boats.

"We had plenty of rafts, however, as each of the rafts could carry 25 men."

He said approximately 20 minutes elapsed after the launching of the life rafts before the Reuben James sank.

"When the Reuben James went down we felt bad because up to that time the ship was nearby in the water and we felt we had company," he explained.

"After it went down we felt all alone—like we were lost. The fellows were cheerful though and a lot of them were joking, calling each other Mack Sennett bathing beauties and accusing each other of putting their feet in the water to see if it was cold before they jumped."

Norman Hingula, 25, Brooklyn, first class fireman, was sleeping when he heard a "rumble and then a second one."

After the explosion, emergency lights flickered on momentarily, but immediately went out, he said.

"I heard men crying for help and praying," he said, adding that the tremendous shock of the torpedo's blast had caused him to spit blood for two days.

The men said a naval rescue vessel appeared about 20 minutes after the Reuben James sank and that they remained on that ship for two days.

Two of the destroyer's survivors were not included among those landed here today. The Navy did not disclose their present whereabouts.

Bergstresser said that if granted leave he expected to visit his brother John at Harrisburg, Pa.

'Negotiating Basis' Reported Reached by Hull

the outrage, but speculation arose as to whether the bomb might have been planted by Japanese elements seeking to embarrass the Washington negotiations, which are understood to have turned on the possibility of withdrawing Japanese troops from the French colony.

Secretary Hull summoned the four diplomats to his office at short notice yesterday afternoon and their discussion lasted two hours. Emerging from Hull's office, the British Ambassador, Viscount Halifax, speaking for the group, said he had nothing to add to what he said after a similar meeting last Saturday. At that time he asserted there was little ground for pessimistic assumption in some quarters that there could be no peaceful solution of the Far Eastern crisis. Asked if he was still optimistic, he answered in the affirmative. He referred all other questions to Hull.

It was noticed, however, that the diplomats, who seemed cheerful after their Saturday meeting, were grave after they left Hull's office yesterday. It was assumed that Hull communicated to them the details of his latest talk with the two Japanese envoys at his hotel last Saturday night, providing the groundwork for a possible modus vivendi with Japan.

The points under consideration are said to be as follows: Japan to renounce further aggression either in the southern Pacific or in eastern Siberia. Japan to withdraw her troops from Indo-China, thus removing the immediate danger of a Japanese thrust into Thailand or toward the Dutch East Indies and minimizing the possibility of a Japanese attack on the Burma Road which would cut China's sole line of supplies.

In return, the United States would undertake to unfreeze a certain amount of Japanese funds in this country and partially lift the trade restrictions now in effect, which amount to embargoes.

Would assure Japan of greater access to the raw materials she needs in the Southern Pacific, meaning Indo-China and the Dutch East Indies.

These points are naturally of the utmost concern to the other powers interested in the Pacific and the State Department made it known last night, after Hull's meeting with the four envoys, that further meetings are contemplated. It was added that no meeting has yet been set with the Japanese envoys, indicating that Hull may want to wait for the reaction of some of the other foreign powers before continuing his talks with them.

Hull reiterated at a press conference that the negotiations with the Japanese have been confined mainly to talk, rather than to undertaking any decisions.

No Americans were hurt in the bombing of the American consulate at Saigon but the consulate was so severely damaged that the staff has been obliged to move to temporary quarters while repairs are undertaken.

Besides Consul Sidney H. Browne, the staff of the Consulate include Kingsley W. Hamilton, vice consul, and an American clerk, Miss Carolyn C. Jacobs.

Germans Claim Initiative in Libya

Italians Admit British Penetration Of Over 200 Miles

Rome, Nov. 24.—A British penetration of more than 200 miles across the interior of Libya was acknowledged today by the Italian high command in announcing that a Fascist garrison near the Gialo oasis had been "overpowered" by a formidable enemy tank column.

The communiqué admitted that the British mechanized force had "penetrated deeply" into Libya's rolling desert, apparently driving along the base of the Cyrenaican "hump" in an effort to reach the Gulf of Sidra and cut off the German-Italian troops engaged in violent battle along the east Libyan coast.

(By Italian admission, the British left wing column has advanced more than half way of the 300 miles to its goal.)

Notwithstanding this menace to their southern flank and rear, Axis forces in the coastal areas from Salum west to besieged Tobruk were declared repulsing strong British attacks and were credited with the "complete annihilation" of Britain's entire fourth tank brigade and the capture of its commander identified as Gen. Spertling.

"Several British formations," the war bulletin said, "have been decimated or annihilated."

Fall of Bardia Denied

British claims that the East Libyan Port of Bardia, 10 miles from the Egyptian coastal border, had fallen and that an Italian cruiser and destroyer were sunk in the Mediterranean were denied officially.

British losses in tanks were described in official circles as running in "the hundreds," while "many hundreds" of British officers and men were falling prisoners.

German and Italian dive bombers and fighters were reported "closely supporting" the land forces and were said to have destroyed 26 British planes in Sunday's fighting alone.

"From morning to night," the bulletin related, "embittered ground and air fighting prevailed in a square desert area bounded by Tobruk and Bir El Gobi in the west and Sidi Omar and Salum in the east."

Heavy British tank sorties out of long beleaguered Tobruk, on the Libyan coast 80 miles west of the Egyptian border, were declared smashed by Italian infantry and artillery with the support of German panzer units.

Steamer Damaged

West of Marsa Matruh, on the Egyptian coast, it was added, a large British steamer, escorted by four destroyers and several planes, was torpedoed by an Italian plane, but managed to make port, although seriously damaged.

The high command also claimed capture of an armed British motor schooner and its crew west of Tobruk.

British Caught Nazis Napping

Bardia. Battle was joined Wednesday afternoon and again Thursday morning. The two encounters were fierce. On both Wednesday and Thursday the Germans were driven back. The net result was that many of the British tanks and many more German tanks were knocked out, the British remaining in possession of the battlefield.

This means that all the disabled tanks fell into British hands. Some of the American tanks were put back into service quickly. Some lay motionless on the desert, too seriously damaged to be repaired on the field. Some were wrecked beyond recovery.

After the second encounter the Germans retired northward. Then, apparently as a precaution against being split up by the British, the German command ordered all that was left of Group Y to move westward and consolidate with Group X.

Meanwhile, British, New Zealand and Indian infantry, with some tanks, went after German and Italian posts along the frontier. A New Zealand patrol entered Bardia and found it abandoned.

Supporting the combined British tank columns farther west was South African infantry which cleaned up several Italian formations with bayonets and grenades in hand-to-hand fighting.

The British are now whittling down the German force and the operation may take some time. The Germans are pressed by the British armored force and infantry from the south and southwest and by the Tobruk garrison from the north-west. The road to the west, a by-pass around Tobruk, is still open to the Axis, but it runs through several gulches where the Germans might be jammed in bottlenecks.

Apparently the Germans preferred to remain where they were and fight it out.

Perhaps the most credit so far as land forces are concerned should go to column 2, which hurled back a panzer force more decisively than the British ever did before. The fighters were crack English regiments, largely veterans of last winter's campaign.

Berlin Describes Desert Battle Of See-Saw Fury

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Nov. 24.—German war dispatches tonight pictured the Battle of the Libyan Desert as one of see-saw fury in which the Germans and Italians had wrested the initiative from the British.

German sources generally stressed the power of Axis counterattacks, the mounting number of British planes and tanks reported destroyed and British prisoners taken, but asserted that the whirlwind action there made the naming of places taken and retaken pointless.

A military spokesman said of the American-built planes and tanks which the Germans are meeting in Africa that a "precise judgment" of how good these were would have to wait "until we clean up the battlefield."

A spokesman denied British claims of the capture of Bardia. "The city is still in Axis hands on account of the bravery of the Italian troops," he said.

Three central areas of violent fighting, if not actual fronts, emerged from the somewhat confused picture here of the ever-shifting struggle. These were Bardia, Tobruk and a spot some distance south of Tobruk.

Commentators said that on the basis of primary German strategy of destroying the enemy there was still room for optimism.

German sources yesterday had claimed that more than 280 British tanks and 200 armored cars were smashed but today the high command merely said that numerous additional tanks had been destroyed and "the number of prisoners and the amount of booty is increasing."

Other German sources said ten British planes had been shot down in combat.

There was no indication of German losses.

British Blockade Pinching Nazis, Diplomat Says

New York, Nov. 24 (AP).—Asserting the British blockade was becoming increasingly more effective, Prof. Noel Frederick Hall said on his arrival from Lisbon today that while the Germans are not going to collapse tomorrow, "they are scratching their heads pretty hard, wondering where to turn next."

Prof. Hall, second minister at the British Embassy at Washington, in charge of cooperation on economic activities, was one of 40 passengers aboard the Yankee Clipper.

"The Germans are really under great pressure," he said. "They would not attempt to go careening across Europe for oil by force of arms if they weren't."

Among the other passengers was Harrison Freeman Matthews, of Baltimore, who had been serving as first secretary at the American Embassy in Vichy. Matthews said "practically all of southern France" had turned to bicycles for transportation because of a lack of gasoline.

Lloyd May Seek Governor's Post

Hollywood, Nov. 24 (AP).—Harold Lloyd of the movies said today he had been asked by a group of San Franciscans to run for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in the primaries next August.

"I will make some definite statement after the first of the year," Lloyd said. "I am not a politician and I never have been in politics."

A delegation of Los Angeles men made the same request, he added. Long a star, Lloyd now is producing pictures for RKO studio.

Two More Nations to Join Anti-Comintern Bloc Today

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Nov. 24.—Seven more governments, either active Axis allies or occupied by Axis troops, tomorrow will join the six-power anti-Comintern pact aimed against "all destructive powers which directly or indirectly support bolshevism."

This phrase was taken by observers as a reference to the United States and Britain because of their support of the Soviet armies fighting an Axis invasion. Berlin considers these nations active sponsors of "world bolshevism" because of that support.

Authorized Germans said the new signers are to be Finland, Croatia, Rumania and Slovakia, who have contributed manpower in the battle against Russia; occupied Denmark and Bulgaria, and the Japanese-sponsored Nanking regime in China.

The six nations which will renew their signatures at the noon ceremony marking the fifth anniversary of the pact are Germany, Japan, Italy, Spain, Hungary and Manchukuo which was created by a Japanese invasion of Manchuria.

It was not known who would represent Manchukuo and Nanking, but the Japanese Ambassador, Gen. Hiroshi Oshima, will represent Japan (which has a neutrality pact with the U. S. S. R., signed last April before Germany discarded her Russian friendship agreement and invaded Russia).

Nine foreign ministers will attend. The first to arrive was Count Galeazzo Ciano, of Italy, followed by Dr. Laslo de Bardossy, of Hungary. They were met by German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop at the flag-decked railway station.

The observance was described as "a demonstration of defensive will to oppose all destructive powers which directly or indirectly support bolshevism," and "an alliance which will create the preconditions for a new order in Europe and for the application of principles of a new order in the entire world."

Asked whether any nation had declined an invitation to be present, an authorized source said: "German diplomacy is such that it never received a refusal."

One correspondent inquired how certain powers intending to sign the agreement could join in a treaty with the Nanking Chinese regime when their governments had not recognized that government. No comment was returned to this question.

fought and is being fought with the utmost resolution by both sides, has been in progress without cessation for over 48 hours.

The fall of Gambut in itself gravely imperiled the Axis supply lines and it appeared that Rommel, having no hope now of getting out before the decision fell, was throwing his every reserve into the action—struggling not for those supply bases which are essential in prolonged fighting, but rather for his army's life.

Even British quarters spoke of Gambut as a triumph far secondary to the supreme objective of destroying the Axis forces.

Battle lines as such, trenches, fixed positions—all these were absent.

"In many ways it is like a gigantic dog fight, with enormous swirling masses of men and machines in the dust around Rezech," the British spokesman explained.

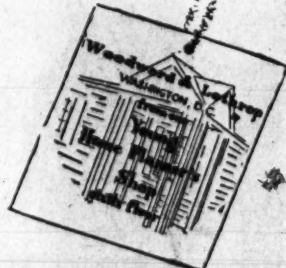

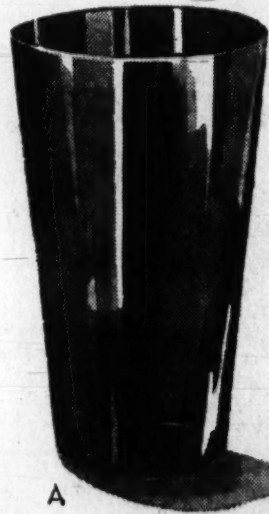

"It is a very bitter battle and both sides are putting everything into it."

"This show means a great deal for German prestige, and they are fighting very hard."

From Tobruk itself, the British garrison that so long had been besieged by previously superior numbers of Axis forces, was reported to have fought its way out to a point within 4 miles of the imperial troops coming forward from east and south.

Try New Tactics British Use Big Planes Against Ships

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 24.—Big four-motored Stirling bombers attacked German shipping off the Dutch coast late today, the air ministry announced, leading to belief that the R. A. F. is experimenting with new tactics in the incessant air battle of the coast.

This was the first reported use of such big planes for daylight raids on shipping, and it was suggested that the plan might be to use them more and more because they are better able to defend themselves than lighter bombers.

The Stirlings have a four-gun rear turret, a two-gun front turret, and other armament amidships. Success of the experiment was indicated by the announcement that no British planes were lost but that German fighter planes were driven off, one was destroyed and others were damaged.

Sunday night the R. A. F. attacked the German-held French ports of Lorient, Brest and Dunkerque with American-made Havocs. Tonight the Germans struck back at Britain, causing a number of casualties and wrecking some homes in a Thames Estuary town. One German raider was reported destroyed.

Sidelights of the War

British Troops Wear Armor

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Nov. 24.—The infantry of the British army was revealed today to be undergoing a revolution, with several divisions wearing light armor plating over their battle dress for training that reproduces conditions of 1941 warfare as closely as possible, even to the use of "live" ammunition.

The aim of the new-style training was to prepare the infantrymen to play a vital part in modern tank warfare. Reports that some of the British troops taking part in the Libyan offensive were wearing the armor could not be confirmed at the war office here.

The armor is of three pieces, reportedly chest, abdomen and leg plates, which altogether weigh only about 3 pounds, and are padded. Its bullet-resisting qualities have been thoroughly checked, and it was said to be proof even against the tommy gun and pistol bullets from virtually point-blank range, while affording protection from shell splinters and glancing rifle and machine-gun bullets.

23 Red Casements Reported Wiped Out By Shock Troops

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Nov. 24.—German tank and artillery units were reported officially tonight only 31 miles northwest of the coveted prize of Moscow after capturing Solnetschnogorski.

The high command said the capture of the city, which does not appear on most maps, occurred "after embittered fighting." War dispatches said 1400 Russians defending 14 three-story-deep underground casements were wiped out by German artillery and shock troops.

Solnetschnogorski apparently is on the Kalinin-Moscow Railroad, hence the Germans claimed their troops had gone two-thirds of the way to Moscow from the bitter fighting area of Kalinin.

German airmen ranged ahead to bomb and disrupt rail traffic on communication lines radiating from the capital itself, the communiqué said.

West of Moscow along the Russian arc of defenses, German dispatches said nine other casements of unusual strength had been overcome.

Nazi artillery silenced the concrete and steel casements, these accounts said, to permit engineers armed with dynamite to approach and complete the destruction.

Other heavy artillery batteries continued to pound besieged Leningrad in the northwest, the communiqué said, and declared Red army "break-out attempts" there had collapsed again with the Soviets losing eight tanks—"of which seven were superheavy."

Nothing was said of operations in the southern Donets Basin area but in the Crimea the Germans admitted the Russians still were holding out at Sevastopol, the big southwestern Red naval base.

In aerial operations over the vast winter front, German dispatches said 11 Russian locomotives, 80 trucks and many artillery batteries were destroyed.

Tank Division From Canada Sent to Britain

U. S. Air Corps Officers Also in Largest Troop Convoy to Cross Ocean

By the Associated Press

A British Port, Nov. 24.—"Sansom's Rough Riders," Canada's first all-tank division commanded by Maj. Gen. E. W. Sansom, has reached Britain in the largest troop convoy ever to cross the Atlantic, guarded part of the way, it is reported, by the United States Navy.

With the tank force, the fourth battle division sent over from Canada, came 75 United States Army Air Corps and Signal Corps experts, an undisclosed number of other Americans who joined the Royal Canadian Air Force, and the largest contingent of Canadian-trained airmen to reach here since the start of the war.

The airmen alone—"more than 1000" strong—filled one big passenger liner in the convoy which came into port unattacked, and still flanked by British warships. The force and the equipment landed was so great that it took several days to disembark.

Their arrival boosted to more than 100,000 the number of Canadian service men in Britain. There now are three infantry divisions, a tank division, a tank brigade and the equivalent of at least two more divisions in maintenance and other units.

Also in the convoy were a group of Netherlands seamen trained in the East Indies, Belgian and Norwegian recruits, and 56 nursing sisters with a general hospital unit from Nova Scotia.

Except for a few stormy days the voyage from an eastern Canadian port was described as uneventful. It was disclosed that ships of the United States Atlantic patrol accompanied the convoy part of the way across the Atlantic where they were met by warships from Britain who took over the escort.

estimated at more than 40 divisions—roughly 600,000 men.

The German gains apparently were made in the Moshalsk section, 57 miles west of Moscow, southwest of the capital, and south of Tula which the Russians said the Germans were fighting fiercely to flank. It was in these sectors where defense forces were reported pushed back to second lines.

Pravda predicted, however, the Germans were due for "many surprises" in the network of fortifications which it said remained between the attacking armies and the stubbornly guarded capital. From the Crimea the only news reaching here was that the garrison of Sevastopol had driven the German right flank back several miles, recapturing several important heights, in strong counterattacks.

Reported collapse of week-long negotiations between railroad labor and management representatives yesterday threw a black cloud over a defense labor situation already darkened by a jurisdictional strike of 8,500 St. Louis A. The railroad conference, who sided discussions late yesterday in an atmosphere of discouragement, were expected to report the results, if any, of their talks to President Roosevelt today.

Movie Style Butter, Eggs Make British Wax Poetic

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc. London (Tuesday), Nov. 25.—Golden and white eggs, frying in rich yellow butter, a single shot in a new technicolor motion picture from Hollywood. "Moon Over Miami," starring Betty Grable, Don Ameche and Robert Cummings, just opened in London, not only brings "Oh's" and "Ah's" and wistful comments from audiences here, but have inspired a poem entitled "Reminder" in this morning's Daily Mail.

The poem follows:

"Magic of movies, great and new. Here is a thing for which we pray: Sit the show 'round for this fair view

Some six or seven times a day. Moaning low—our cheeks all wet—Lest we forget, lest we forget.

Swiftly our rations melt away (Turn out the gas, keep low the fire);

Now all our fowls of yesterday. At one with Nineveh and Tyre; See the rich yolk and watch it set—Lest we forget, lest we forget.

Hollywood we will cry, "Encore!" In rainbow hues let all men see; This is the thing we're fighting for—That what has been may once more be.

That what is yours you may have yet. Oh, Hollywood, lest you forget. Under Britain's rationing scheme individuals are limited to one egg a month—if they can get it—and two ounces of butter a week.

Steel Co., Pittsburgh, Calif., had C. I. O. unions as disputants.

Since the principal issue of each one relates to wages, it was believed that immediate termination of the strikes and ultimate settlement of the disputes would be possible if they could be certified to the Mediation Board. Recent resignation of all C. I. O. members of the board, however, prevents certification of cases involving unions of that organization.

With captive coal mines going back into operations yesterday, enabling resumed work at several steel-making operations shut down by the recent coal strike, arrangements were being made for the final arbitration hearings on the long-drawn out bitter dispute.

John R. Steelman, public member of the three-man arbitration board named by President Roosevelt to rule on the United Mine Workers' demand for a union shop, said yesterday that hearings would begin tomorrow at a time and place to be decided.

U. S. Hunting Capacity House Key Nazi Agent Greet's 'Met's' Probe Witness Season Opener

Given a year ago, was prepared and given to Townsend by order of George T. Eggleston, editor of Scribner's. Alfons B. Land, counsel for the magazine, promised to produce him, to testify, declaring the publisher's wish to cooperate with the foreign agent investigation.

Yesterday Land said that inquiry had brought out that Townsend had no connection with Scribner's but was a writer for Lake Geneva Publications, Inc., which issued a paper called The Herald. Land said his firm had nothing to do with the Lake Geneva company, which, like Scribner's, operates in Lake Geneva, Wis.

Special Prosecutors William Power Maloney and Edward J. Hickey, Jr., immediately launched a Nation-wide search for the missing witness. In particular, Townsend was sought in San Francisco, New York and the Lake Geneva area.

Hickey left by plane for Miami, Fla., but explained that his trip had to be postponed because he is to appear for the Government in a case in Federal Court there at 10 o'clock this morning.

Bills Introduced

Bills more strictly defining foreign agents, rigidly limiting their activities against this country or the Pan-American republics and providing severe penalties for violation, have been introduced by Representative Hattin W. Summers (Democrat), of Texas, and Senator Kenneth D. McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee.

Summers, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, yesterday named a subcommittee of seven members, who will hold hearings on the bill Friday.

Senator Frederick Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana, Senate Judiciary chairman, also named a subcommittee, which probably will attend the House hearings to save time.

The Senate committee yesterday heard an endorsement of the measure from Attorney General Biddle and explanations of its clauses from spokesmen of the State, Postoffice and Justice departments.

"I believe the subcommittee was impressed by the necessity for quick action," Senator Van Nuys said, "and that they expect to be ready to report next Monday."

Collins Fails to Appear

Administration sponsors of the measure emphasized that without its provisions enforcement officers are helpless against many foreign agents who keep technically within the present law.

Besides Townsend, Seward Collins, identified as an associate of George Sylvester Viereck, indicted German propagandist, was scheduled to testify before the special grand jury yesterday. He did not appear.

The prosecutors spent the session questioning Theodore H. Hoffman, president of the Steuben Society of America, and Marie F. Johansen, secretary.

Miss Johansen was one of the signers of two announcements issued this summer, calling on members of the society to come to meetings and get copies of friendly speeches of Congressmen for mailing "without" postage stamps. Many copies of the speeches listed were mailed in New York at the time under Congressional frank. One of those was a speech of Hoffman, which had been inserted in the Congressional Record.

This writer, who testified twice previously, was recalled before the grand jury for half an hour.

May Rule Today on Hill

Justice James M. Morris, of the District Court, indicated yesterday, that he will rule today on the technical objections raised by counsel for George Hill to the indictments charging him with perjury. Justice Morris also will rule on Hill's petition to be allowed to see the transcript of all his testimony before the grand jury.

Another prosecutor joined the propaganda squad at Judiciary Square yesterday. Albert E. Arent, who filed letters of authority from the Attorney General, took part in several early investigations of the propaganda squad.

Psychiatrist Tells of Studies in Air Raids

Although the British have been too busy with "practical affairs" to make much of a study of what air raids have done to the nervous systems of their population, Dr. Robert Dick Gillespie, Scottish psychiatrist, said yesterday, they have learned:

1. About soldiers—That had psychiatric risks should be excluded from the military services in the beginning and that physical fitness is tied closely to morale.

2. About civilians—That air raid shock usually can be overcome by kindness, warmth, shelter and sedation.

And as always, it was late arriving.

Today, with the war hanging over the heads of everyone, the usual line of standees was considerably curtailed.

Yet the usual capacity audience of more than 400, including 400 standees, had collected before the first act of Mozart's gay opera had finished.

Tonight was the first time an opera of this composer ever has opened a Metropolitan season. The 150th anniversary of Mozart's death will be December 5.

Although "The Marriage of Figaro" cast contained a number of stars, Edward Johnson, entering his seventh season as general manager, carefully abstained from emphasizing individuals.

In the list were Elisabeth Rethberg, Bidu Sayao, Rise Stevens, Irma Petina, Ezio Pinza, John Brownlee and Salvatore Baccaloni. The conductor was Ettore Panizza.

Dr. Gillespie is in Washington on the first lap of a lecture tour that will take him throughout the country. He lectured at the Metropolitan Club yesterday before morale officers of the Army and Navy, and various civilian defense and health officials. Last night he spoke at St. Elizabeths Hospital. Today he will hold conferences with morale officers at the War Department.

The English learned early in the "air raid game," he declared, to rely on the security of mathematical probability. Women and children came through the worst raids probably better than men, he said.

Women Less Susceptible

"We have no definite data on it, but it would seem women are less susceptible to shock and frantic than men. Children between the ages of 7 and 11 looked on bombings as a game. Most of the psychiatric distress among children was not due to shock, but to the upsetting of their normal life, separation from their parents, and the like."

He stressed the importance of keeping the civilian population busy during raid times. "It is necessary that a person be reinstated in the picture as rapidly as possible, so that he will not have time to ruminate on his misfortune. Also we have found that in the evacuation areas a psychiatric squad is a most necessary thing."

"Most of all, during the raid years we have learned that the human organism can stand an extraordinary lot of punishment," he declared.

Labor Legislation Gets Roosevelt 'Go'

Senate production, although Speaker Rayburn earlier in the day had signalled the decision.

McCormack, designated with Martin as spokesmen for the group, declined to discuss other specific plans reviewed.

Questioned about proposals for a secret ballot of workers before a defense walk-out could be ordered, the Democratic leader said he could only give his personal opinion on that and could not speak for the rest.

"I think that would be inadvisable or unnecessary at the present time," he said.

He said there was a "consensus" only on the so-called "cooling off" period, on arbitration at the discretion of the President if conciliation efforts collapsed and on a "temperate approach" to a legislative solution.

Asked if he meant by arbitration at the end of mediation attempts "compulsory arbitration," he said: "That's correct."

A reporter asked if the conference considered defense labor controls under "a set of principles such as was used during the first World War."

McCormack said that was discussed also.

"No legislation was necessary then because capital and labor got together," he said.

Although the leader made no commitments for the President on any specific bill, he said he felt that "reasonable legislation would meet the approval of the President."

In other quarters it was learned that individual authors of at least three of the pending House bills explained their proposals, and there was round-table discussion of each.

Chairman Norton of the Labor Committee outlined his bill for reviving legislatively the National Defense Mediation Board, with power to forbid strikes for a waiting period up to 30 days.

Representative Smith (Democrat), Virginia, outlined his more sweeping proposals ranging from a secret ballot of all workers in a plant before a strike could be ordered to prohibitions on mass picketing and violence.

Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, discussed his own bill now waiting on the House calendar, which also provides the waiting period and gives legislative status to a strengthened National Mediation Board.

All Provide "Cooling-Off"

Each of the three bills provides for "cooling off," but only Vinson's provides in effect for compulsory arbitration, by withholding rights under the National Labor Relations Act from any labor group that refuses to accept mediation.

Should the principle of "compulsory" arbitration in any form be adopted in Congress, it would provide stronger controls than most spokesmen had indicated the Administration is willing to go.

Representative Martin told reporters that Republicans were not committed to any specific bill but did favor action "to keep defense work going."

"We have given the green light," Rayburn said at his noon press conference. "We discussed the labor situation with the President. We are going ahead to get the best bill possible."

Besides Speaker Rayburn and Majority Leader McCormack, the President called to his extraordinary night conference House Minority Leader Martin, who recently challenged the Administration to act, and Representative Welch, of California, ranking Republican member of the House Labor Committee.

Six Democratic House members, either interested in widely varying bills or working as intermediaries between opposed groups, were included.

They were Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House Labor Committee and the ranking committeemen, Representative Ramspeck, of Georgia; Representative Smith, of Virginia; Representative Vinson and Cox, of Georgia, and Representatives Cullen and Gavagan, of New York.

Secretary Perkins and Assistant Secretary Daniel W. Tracy represented the Labor Department.

The day's Capitol developments had brought testimony before House and Senate committees on widely different legislative proposals.

Smith Explains His Bill

Before the House Labor Committee, Representative Smith explained his comprehensive bill to impose tight curbs on production stoppages, through a cooling-off period and a secret strike ballot before strikes, freezing of existing open and closed-shop arrangements, and bans on mass picketing and sympathetic and jurisdictional strikes.

Representative Vinson, author of the "cooling-off" bill now on the House calendar and already approved by the Rules Committee, outlined his measure together with proposed changes in the National Mediation Board setup.

Taft, Gillette Back Stated Foreign Policy

By the Associated Press

Two Senators who repeatedly have battled against Administration foreign policy measures—Taft (Republican), Ohio, and Gillette (Democrat), Iowa—said yesterday they stood ready to support President Roosevelt's course in international affairs so long as it was covered by Congressional enactments.

Gillette said he had written the President that he would stand solidly behind any steps the Chief Executive may take under the new legislation permitting American merchant ships to carry arms and sail anywhere in the world. Although declining to make public the letter, the Iowa lawmaker believed that once Congress had declared a policy it was the duty of the minority to join with the majority in supporting an executive action to carry it out.

Reservation by Gillette

That was true, he added, not only of the recent Neutrality Act revision legislation but of the Lease-Lend Act and any other defense or foreign policy measures adopted by Congress.

Gillette made it clear, however, that he was not committing himself on any new foreign policy proposals which might be submitted to Congress. He mentioned the question of an American expeditionary force, and said that while the expeditionary force to Iceland and the sending of a small force of technicians to North Ireland was one thing, the transportation of a huge force to Europe or Africa would be quite another.

Taft Gives Views

Taft said he was willing to support any needed measures to carry out the broad policy legislation already enacted. "For instance," he said, "if the President needs money to buy guns for the ships or to send them into ports which formerly were forbidden, then I shall vote for it."

Like Gillette, Taft made it clear that he would back the Chief Executive so far as Congress specifically has authorized his actions. Meanwhile, Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, said that members of the minority who offer support to the Chief Executive "are to be commended for giving an example of real democracy."

DOGGED DOGS—The big-pawed puppy (left) with the cute but hungry look wandered into a St. Louis newspaper office bearing the note: "I am a homeless little doggie. Unless you do something for me I'll starve." It was signed, "Sniffles." Yesterday, as snow covered St. Louis for the first time this season, the humane society pondered appeals of more than 150 persons anxious to adopt Sniffles. Meanwhile, in New York, Lucky (right) lived up to his name. He fell from a fifth-floor window and lived. "Lucky" suffered two broken legs, however, but was soon patched up by veterinarians.

Pine Upholds Law Governing D. C. Medicine

District Court Justice David A. Pine yesterday upheld the constitutionality of a Federal act regulating the practice of medicine in the District, asserting that the statute was intended to protect public health in the Capital.

The ruling arose from action brought by the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District against F. William Ferris, 324 Bryant Street Northeast, seeking to enjoin the defendant's alleged illegal practice of medicine.

The justice rejected a defense motion to dismiss the Government's case, being handled by Assistant United States Attorney Bernard J. Long.

Ferris had attacked the constitutionality of the Healing Art Act, contending that under this law the commission is attempting to deprive him of his right to trial by jury. He also contended that the act is unconstitutional because it allegedly authorizes injunctions such as were now allowable by English Common Law, in force at the time of the Constitution's adoption.

Long told the court that Ferris' license to practice was revoked by the court in 1932, after he had pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with violation of the Harrison Narcotic Act.

The prosecution claims that Ferris has continued to engage in medical practice illegally. Long said that the Government would ask the court to set the case down for early trial.

Animals Talk, Expert Claims; Squeaks May Be Love Stuff

When they bark, squeak or chatter, they're really talking to one another, says Ernest P. Walker, assistant director of the National Zoological Park, who, after years of observing various species, concludes: "There are no 'dumb' animals."

"For example," he says, "a tiny pocket mouse that lived on my desk at home for several years appeared to be entirely silent. But when I held him against my ear, I found he was carrying on a rapid chattering and scolding."

"A little female of the same species, a temperamental spinster, had but to look at him, change her expression ever so little, and he would be almost cowed. I am satisfied she talked to him most effectively."

Walker's report, issued by the Smithsonian Institution, said that kangaroo rats generally are believed to be "dumb," but when two are brought together and do not like each other, they utter buzzing growls.

"I have heard my little kangaroo rat utter chirps," he says, "which could be heard a distance of 8 or 10 feet. If one of these animals is held close to one's ear a series of buzzing sounds can be heard, dots and dashes in varying frequency and tempo, that must mean something to the creature who makes them."

Director Walker did not say whether he ever had heard the story of the "talking horse."

It seems that during his vacation in the country, a "city-slicker" was startled to hear an old horse speak to him. During the odd conversation, the nag boasted that once he had won the Kentucky Derby.

The visitor from the city, amazed by the horse's ability to talk, begged the farmer who owned him to tell the animal.

"Oh, he'd be no good to you," answered the farmer. "He's just an old worthless nag. I hope you weren't taken in by that story he tells about winning the Derby."

Six Volunteers Braved Inferno In Effort to Save Ark Royal

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 24.—The grim story of six volunteers who braved an inferno of fumes and fire in an effort to save a navy's pride and a captain who clambered down from his sinking ship, hand over hand like a monkey, was told today by the chief stoker of the Ark Royal, torpedoed British aircraft carrier.

The captain was L. E. H. Maund, last man to leave the carrier after a futile 12-hour fight to keep her afloat.

The stoker told how Maund, with a spotlight playing on him and a handful of the ship's crew sharing him from a rescue tug, "came down the ship's side, hand over hand like a monkey, his face grim at the prospect of losing his ship and we hauled him aboard the tug."

The 2-year-old 10-million-dollar warship, third to bear the name Ark Royal in the British navy, was torpedoed on November 14 and sank the following morning a few miles off Gibraltar.

At the time Capt. Maund left her, she had a list of 24 degrees and the lower edge of her great flight deck was just 2 feet from the surface of the water, the stoker said. That was at 4:20 a. m. At 6 o'clock she rolled over and plunged to the bottom.

From the time the torpedo crashed into her side at 4 o'clock the previous afternoon, he said, the ship's company did everything possible to save her "and up to the last we thought we could."

"With six volunteers, I got personal permission to go below to try to get up steam," he related. "We shut off the stops and made the ship water tight. We raised steam and got eight pumps working and managed to decrease the list from 19 to 17 degrees."

"It was hell below. We rigged lines to hold against the list. But after a while it was apparent she was slowly going over. Finally we had to shut down because oil was over everything. Fires were raging and the fumes were fierce."

"I sent my volunteers up, one by one."

Banker to Get Bulk of $250,000 Jackson Estate

An estate of almost $250,000 was left by the late Mrs. Frances H. Jackson, who died in Takoma Park, Md., October 27. District Court was informed yesterday in a petition for probate of her will filed by the National Savings & Trust Co.

The major portion, which includes $100,000 in cash and personal property and about $80,000 in real estate, was bequeathed to William D. Hoover, officer of the bank and long-time friend of Mrs. Jackson's.

Requests to friends and relatives amount to about $10,000.

A second probate petition was filed for the $150,000 estate of Frederick G. Hunt, of 1833 Lamont Street Northwest, who died on November 5, by the Washington Loan & Trust Co.

Shorten Courses Students Go Into Defense, Drop College

By J. A. Rawlings
Associated Press Staff Writer
Chicago.—Many of America's schools of higher learning are operating with decreased enrollments of regular students during the national emergency as a result of the draft and the call of young men into well-paying defense industrial positions.

This was disclosed today in a survey by the Associated Press of reports from more than 60 universities and colleges in all sections of the country which also showed that:

1. While numerous institutions are offering short courses preparatory to defense work in industry, only a relatively few have "streamlined" their regular courses to shorten the gap between scholastic and industrial assembly lines—or the army. Instead, a considerable proportion are counting on summer courses as a means of completing regular courses in less elapsed time than it ordinarily takes.

2. That there has been an increased interest in the study of the sciences and engineering and added emphasis on Latin American culture, reflecting existing international relations and the administration's "good neighbor" policy.

Few Show Increases
A small proportion of the more than three score of schools represented in the survey reported increases.

At the same time, President Raymond Walters, of the University of Cincinnati, said that in reports from 573 colleges and universities, 331 noted fewer students, the losses running from 5 to 10 per cent; 125 held to their 1940 figures, and 117 showed gains.

He said the most heavily hit were teachers colleges, which of 64 reporting, had no gains. Only five held their own, the remainder showing losses from 5 to 25 per cent.

Enrollment losses were noted particularly among upper classmen and graduate students. A notable exception in the trend toward lower total enrollments was reported from Washington University, St. Louis, where more men and fewer women registered, with a total increase of about two per cent.

Harvard Shortens Course
Harvard University was among institutions which arranged to reduce the elapsed time in school for some students. Its undergraduate college put into effect a plan under which students who are candidates for honors may be graduated in three years by taking extra courses and attending summer school. The Harvard Law School introduced a two-semester plan so students called away at mid-year by the draft would not lose credit for the first half year of their work. Previously all law school work at Harvard was credited on an annual basis.

Colgate University worked out a plan to enable young men getting out of high school at 18 to finish their college work before they become of draft age.

At Cornell University, where the courses in the law school were put on a three-term basis, extending over the summer period to get students through six months earlier, the principal trend noted was a definite shift toward engineering by men students who formerly enrolled for general education in the arts college.

Wellesley College was among the schools reporting Latin American cultural studies.

Indicative of this trend, too, was Northwestern University's College of Liberal Arts, which reported 717 enrolled in Spanish courses, compared with 518 in the previous academic year.

Federal Judge Davis Submits Resignation
J. Warren Davis, retired judge of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals at Philadelphia, has submitted his resignation to President Roosevelt. White House have disclosed.

Judge Davis was twice tried on charges of conspiring to obstruct justice and defraud the United States, but the juries disagreed in both trials. The Justice Department then decided against a third trial and Attorney General Biddle asked the House Judiciary Committee to institute impeachment proceedings.

As a retired judge, Davis continued to receive full pay of $12,000 a year and remained available for assignment to duty in the Federal courts. His resignation will remove him from the list of judges.

Wallace, announces that, with the approval of the President, he had appointed Nelson A. Rockefeller, coordinator of inter-American affairs, as a member of the Economic Defense Board.

because of ill-health. He organized and led numerous desert motor expeditions and explorations in Egypt, Sudan and Libya.

Living alone for months in the desert, Bagnold learned that currents ran through the sand dunes much as they do in the oceans. He wrote a treatise on the physics of blown sand and desert dunes.

When the war broke out, Bagnold was still exploring. A ship collision, later entailing a stop at Suez, brought him into touch with Gen. Wavell. The British commander found out that Bagnold knew the Libyan terrain—that he knew when, where and how best to travel across the vast wastelands.

Bagnold's extensive knowledge was placed at the state's disposal. British motorized units were fitted with some of his devices designed to keep engines clear of sand. R. A. F. pilots profited by his advice.

Canada Prepares for Complete Control Of Prices and Wages to Avert Inflation

By P. J. Philip
Copyright by New York Times
Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 24.—With the courage of pioneers and under the leadership of Donald Gordon, the most dynamic man in the government could find for the job, Canada is getting ready to put a complete control on all prices so as to prevent wartime conditions from displacing the wage and price structure of the country and producing such inflation as occurred during the last war.

The price controllers are in effect trying to throw a dam across a stream which has already begun to rise and they cannot foresee at what point a weakness may develop or how the water will behave. Whether they will succeed or not depends on so many unknown factors that no one dares make any forecast but at least the builders have these elements on their side.

First, the Canadian people, big and little—business people as well as workers and consumers—are conscientiously decided that if this effort can help win the war and strengthen their country for war and peace, they are willing to make it. There are, and there will be, of course, exceptions, but in the great mass there is a firm acceptance of the gravity of the situation and the necessity for heroic measures.

The only question in their minds is, will this control of prices and wages help win the war? If they can be persuaded that it will, and they are disposed toward persuasion, they will support it with all their power.

Second, the men who have been given the hard task of constructing this great dam are going to do it absolutely determined to win, whatever the difficulties, the risks, the mistakes that may be made, the opposition or the hardships that must of necessity fall on certain businesses. The government and its advisers began by rejecting the proposal to bring prices under control one by one, and vigorously accepted the more heroic part of putting a ceiling on all prices simultaneously. Like all acts of courage it has already been found, it is claimed, to be the simplest and surest method. The experience of the existing wartime prices and trade board had already proved that the piecemeal method was always getting out of control. One official described it as the effort to keep a flock of sheep together with a single dog. Now they are going to put a fence round the field and keep the whole flock inside.

The government therefore decided that the only possible and right method of preventing shortages from causing prices to pyramid with wages lagging behind was to impose a price ceiling and to stabilize wages with a provision permitting the granting of an increased cost-of-living bonus at stated intervals in accord with the price index.

That decision was relatively easy to make in theory. Now it has got to be applied and the date of December 1 has been set for its application. On and after that date any goods sold to the public must not be higher in price than they were during the "basic period" which has been fixed at the four weeks between September 15 and October 11.

During the weeks that have elapsed since the first announcement was made there has been a tendency on the part of traders to believe that there would be adjustments and changes and prices have tended to rise. But that is where the first rude shock of battle will be engaged, Donald Gordon, an Aberdonian by birth and now deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, the man who has been chosen as chairman of the board, has announced that there is going to be "no pussyfooting, no half measures."

"You cannot compromise with inflation," he declared, and he has stated his policy in this way: "Rather than allow retail prices to rise, the prices of wholesalers and manufacturers must be reduced. Price control is going to be made effective. No government could undertake so vital a policy without the resolute intention to put it into full operation."

One of the many difficulties with which the board will have to contend is well illustrated in this quotation from its statement of policy: "Suppliers of goods and services are not permitted to give the consumer less value for his money by lowering the quality, material, style, workmanship, size, weight or intrinsic value of what they sell."

It is admitted that "genuine hardship" must result from the strict application of the ceiling, but it is pointed out that while profits will undoubtedly be reduced, the board has no intention of allowing any essential enterprise to be forced to the wall by the imposition of price control.

With retail prices fixed, the intricate business will have to be done in most trades of rolling back the margin of profit through the various stages of distribution and production as far as the primary manufacturer or importer and the board's business will be to see that each takes a proportionate cut. At the same time it is essential to the success of the plan that there should be a continued flow of goods to the public, although that flow must necessarily be reduced by the diversion of labor and raw materials to war work.

All this will demand the cooperation not only of the public but the goodwill of every person and corporation engaged in the business structure from the primary manufacturer upward. In cases where there is not such goodwill, the board is empowered to demand severe penalties.

As a precaution against being charged with violating the law and as a measure of help to the authorities, all business executives, whatever their status, have been advised to have ready a profit and loss statement, balance sheet, cost analysis, physical inventory, etc., which will give a clear picture of all phases of their operations at the close of business of November 30 in preparation for this change-over to a government-controlled price structure which begins on December 1.

The Obligation of the Press

A Statement of Policy from Chicago's New Morning Newspaper

THE CHICAGO SUN

A NEW MORNING NEWSPAPER will soon take its place in the swiftly-moving, ever-changing scene that is Chicago, and the nation, and the world.

There has perhaps been no moment in history more fraught with significance, more demanding of integrity, sanity, judgment and foresight, than the moment of this newspaper's birth.

A newspaper—any newspaper—can influence thought and action, sway public opinion. It can breed prejudice or nurture tolerance, instill fear and hatred or foster courage and understanding.

Awareness of this power of the press imposes upon the publishers of any newspaper, particularly in these times, an obligation without parallel in the history of publishing.

While we accept this obligation in the deepest sense of humility, we face it courageously, believing in the rightness of our guiding policies.

This will be a completely objective newspaper—which simply means securing and presenting the facts as they are, unbiased by prejudice or temperament.

This newspaper will bow frankly to the inviolate privilege of the citizen to make up his or her own mind, believing that the average American is fully capable of doing so, if given the facts and the news of the day.

Editorially, this newspaper will be independent, progressive, liberal and dedicated to the maintenance of the American form of constitutional, democratic government, and for the preservation of the democracies of the world. It will agree, where it finds agreement, with the policies and actions of any administration. It will disagree where it does not. It will not wear the colors of party.

In short, believing that journalism is a public service, aware of the rights and ability of people to think for themselves, conscious of its true obligation as an instrument of powerful influence in the community and the nation, the founder and publisher and editor of your new Chicago morning newspaper commit themselves to the important task ahead, and promise you unbiased reporting of the news of your city and the world.

Torrance Says He's the One In Who's Who

Monterey, Mexico, Nov. 24.—Dr. Arthur F. Torrance, charged with the murder of his wealthy bride, swore on the witness stand today that he is the renowned tropical disease specialist listed in Who's Who in America, and described how his wife received fatal injuries in an automobile accident.

It is alleged that he beat her to death. Nervous, his voice choked with emotion and his eyes welling with tears, the 54-year-old traveler, through an interpreter, told Judge Jesus B. Santos of the Third Penal District Court that he was innocent of killing Mrs. Ada Loveland Torrance, of Kalamazoo, Mich., on November 8, three weeks after their marriage.

Torrance said it was "impossible to describe in detail" the accident on the Pan American Highway 10 miles north of Monterey.

"We were listening to the Southern California-Stanford football game on the car radio," he testified. "She was driving. Suddenly an animal appeared in the road."

"The next thing I know I had been thrown out of the car. I heard my wife screaming. I struggled to the car and gathered her in my arms. Then her voice ceased."

Mrs. Torrance died of a skull fracture, Torrance said she hit her head against the car's rear-view mirror. Police charge the doctor struck her with a thermos bottle. Judge Santos has until Thursday to conclude his examination. Then he may free Torrance. But if he does not free him, the doctor must be held for a possible minimum of 30 days in Nuevo Leon State Penitentiary while the judge makes a further investigation. There is no jury trial in Mexico.

Peace Sentiment In Britain Hits New Low, Poll Shows

London, Nov. 25 (Tuesday).—Despite recent reports of possible peace moves by Germany, peace sentiment in Great Britain is at its lowest point since the outbreak of the war, the British Gallup Poll will report today.

The British Institute of Public Opinion asked the following question:

"Would you approve or disapprove if the British government were to discuss peace proposals with Germany now?"

Eighty-five per cent, an overwhelming majority of those polled, said they would disapprove, only 7 per cent said they would approve, while 8 per cent said they "didn't know."

Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland, was main speaker at the meeting. He told the volunteers that "your objective is not just to collect dollars and cents, but to raise funds so that we can give the help so urgently needed by our unfortunate neighbors."

Rose Is Presented to Willett

Preceding his talk, Chest Director Willett was presented with a rose by J. Clifford Folger, general campaign manager, as a token of the organization's appreciation of Willett's leadership. The several hundred workers attending the meeting stood up and enthusiastically cheered the director.

Invocation was delivered by Rabbi Solomon H. Metz, of Adas Israel Synagogue.

Two more report meetings are scheduled in the campaign, one today and the final one on Thursday. Bishop James E. Freeman will speak at the meeting today.

"over-all" proposal and to accept the selective plan only if drastically modified.

Administration Scores

The Administration scored a victory before the battle on the House floor began, but it was a costly triumph that alienated a large block of Republican votes. By a 14-10 vote, the Banking Committee re-stored an Administration-sought provision to authorize the price administrator to license sales of commodities on which price ceilings have been imposed.

Republican spokesmen were uncompromisingly opposed to the provision as establishing economic censorship under President Roosevelt. The vote in the committee, which a few weeks ago removed the provision from the Administration bill after prolonged and deliberate study was strictly on party lines.

The committee is due to meet again this morning under strong Administration pressure to reverse itself once more, this time to make possible restoration to its bill of a provision empowering the Government to buy and sell any commodity necessary to stabilize prices.

Chamber Buckles Down

If this alteration is accepted, both changes will be offered as committee amendments after the House finishes general debate.

The member went to work yesterday like school boys facing an examination and anxious to learn as much as possible in a short time about a highly complicated subject.

Twice the veteran Representative Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, asked the House to permit Representative Gore (Democrat), of Tennessee, to continue without interruption his plea for acceptance of his "over-all" control bill, written around principles advocated by Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the World War Industries Board.

Several members contended that, except for wages, there was no essential difference between his bill and the Administration measure which authorizes the price ceilings Gore would establish by legislative fiat. The Tennesseean, who will reach his thirty-fourth birthday the day after Christmas, replied:

"I believe in government by law and not government by men."

Gore maintained that control of inflation would be possible only by checking wages and all prices. Attempts to keep prices from soaring by restraining a few of them and failing to check wage increases, he declared, would be like "trying to keep down the grass on a Texas prairie by sitting on the high places."

Farmers Would Fall in Line

"I believe the committee (Administration) bill is more inflationary than deflationary in character," he asserted, contending that it would tend to increase the "inflationary psychology."

If the earnings of industrial workers were restricted, Gore held, the American farmer would accept agricultural price ceilings. He appealed for consideration of his bill apart from "our own puny political interests."

Representative Wolcott, of Michigan, ranking minority member of the Banking Committee, pressed Gore with a speech that sniped at both bills. He attacked the Administration bill as setting up an "economic czar." He predicted that the Gore bill would invite a "multitude of lawsuits" because of inequitable price ceilings.

Wolcott served notice that he would propose amendments to the Administration bill, including one to decentralize the power of the price administrator by establishing a board of review.

"I don't know as I would vote against a bill that would put a reasonable ceiling on wages, but I do not believe that it is necessary to put a ceiling on wages in order to control prices," he declared. "I

Farms to Need Women, First Lady Predicts

The United States "without a doubt" will need a Woman's Land Army in 1942 to keep farm production up to normal, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said yesterday at her weekly press conference.

Whether the army should be made up of volunteers or paid workers, the First Lady said, "will have to be worked out"—but in her capacity as assistant director of the Office of Civilian Defense, she said, she has initiated a "thorough looking into the problem."

"If the workers are paid, of course, they will not come under the supervision of O.C.D.," she declared. "In all instances, details will have to be worked out with State and local defense committees and the program built around the need."

Her conviction that the army must be organized, she said, had been strengthened by recent newspaper reports of extensive migration of farm workers to industrial defense centers.

She said the land army idea was in no way connected with community garden plans, but would necessitate the movement of workers into the regular farm areas where crops are to be raised and harvested.

Expressing her concern over the rent and room situation in Washington, Mrs. Roosevelt said she had talked briefly within the last few days with Defense Housing Coordinator Charles Palmer, who told her rents in the housing development on Euclid Street would be between $20 and $30 a month and that Government girls making from $1200 to $2000 annually be admitted as tenants.

"He told me what everybody else says—that the situation hinges on finances and that future building will be planned around what happens to the Lanham bill," she said.

Advocates Information Center
Mrs. Roosevelt pointed out that housing officials were not inclined to go into cheaper dormitory type of building for girls here, "as they did in the last war," but expressed the opinion that "they may have to yet."

She said she did not believe information about housing was as widespread as it should be, and voiced hope that an information center in a central location could be worked out through the Civilian Defense Bureau.

"I had one letter from a mother asking me to find living accommodations for her daughter, and I found them," she said.

In her civilian defense office, Mrs. Roosevelt revealed, much defense literature is being translated into Portuguese and Spanish for distribution in the Latin Americas.

Constantine Brown, foreign affairs writer, will address the Silver Spring, Md., Lions Club tonight at 8:30 o'clock at a dinner meeting at Indian Spring Golf Club, Colesville Road.

Nebraska Tells of Idle Power, Thousands Forsaking Farms

Hastings, Nebr., Nov. 24.—Nebraska was pictured for the House Committee investigating defense migration today as a State with 100,000 kilowatts of surplus power unused while thousands left the land for jobs in defense industries far from home.

J. W. Creighton, Hastings College president, said many families who migrated during the drought "were the natural failures," but "those leaving now are the more superior individuals whose natural and acquired abilities are relatively great."

"There is ground for fear that this area is to be defaulted into an old people's home," he declared.

The spectacle of idle kilowatts on the plains while some parts of the country faced power shortages was presented by George A. Johnson, general manager of the Central Nebraska (Tri-county) public power and irrigation project. He said the State's public power hookup of hydroelectric projects and former private utilities had a surplus of 100,000 kilowatts, or 133,000 horsepower.

Many steam power generating plants are idle, he reported.

Defense Industries Sought
He joined other witnesses in advocating more defense industries in the Midwest, claiming it would stabilize population movement and prevent skilled labor from being drawn to other areas.

J. O. Hertzler, University of Nebraska sociologist, raised the question whether an aging population caused by departure of young people would reflect its natural conservatism on public affairs.

The next half century may be a time when the Western World needs audacity as well as insight and constructiveness," he said. "Do the oldsters grasp the full significance of the stupendous changes which have been and are taking place?"

Hertzler estimated about 150,000 persons have gone to greener pastures from Nebraska during the last decade, or 11 to 12 per cent of the total population.

A four-point program for stemming the exodus of young people from farm to city, accentuated by the defense program, was offered by H. K. Douthitt, superintendent of the Nebraska School of Agriculture at Curtis.

Wider Opportunities Urged
He urged widening of educational opportunities for farm youths and the setting up of a "lifetime loan system" for young men and women who have no assets "other than their probability of 50 years of active life ahead."

He said the standard of living on farms should be raised by building attractive homes with modern conveniences and a program devised that will tide the beginning farm operator over adverse years.

Conferences with his students, he disclosed, they were not planning to return to the farm because it offers no security, the standard of living is too low and there is no way to get started even if they want to "earn a living."

peoples of the several States must sink or swim together, and that in the long run prosperity and salvation are in union and not division.

The "notion that each community should care for its own indigent, that relief is solely the responsibility of local government" Byrnes termed outmoded, adding that "the theory of the Elizabethan poor laws no longer fits the facts."

He went on to say that "the social phenomenon of large-scale interstate migration is as certainly a matter of national concern as the provision of assistance to those who have found a permanent or temporary abode."

Louis Ottenberg, of Washington, counsel for the United Jewish Appeal, the American Jewish Congress and the American Jewish Committee, yesterday was denied permission to file a brief with the Supreme Court as "friend of the court" in the case of the Schenectady Union Publishing Co. against Representative Sweeney (Democrat), of Ohio.

The newspaper contended the statement did not indicate Sweeney was opposed to the Jewish race because he opposed Freed's appointment.

The court has not yet acted on the appeal.

Woman Says She Tried Suicide After Husband Hung Self
Indianapolis, Nov. 24 (P).—Mrs. Rosemary Cutter Travis, recovering in a hospital from razor-slashed wrists and an over-dose of sleeping tablets, told authorities today she attempted suicide after finding the body of her husband, Dr. Richard C. Travis, 41, hanging from a basement door hinge.

Dr. Wesley C. Ward, deputy coroner, quoted the pretty young brunette as saying the socially prominent urologist hanged himself yesterday after they quarreled at a party.

She said she remembered only vaguely what happened and did not recall writing a note addressed to the physician. Almost illegible, it said, "You have hurt me in front of my friends. I love you. Goodbye."

Inventive Genius To Repel Attack, Says Patent Chief
American scientists have prepared the most deadly and destructive weapons which the world has ever seen to repel any attackers that might threaten this Nation, Conway P. Coe, United States Commissioner for Patents, said last night in a radio address.

American scientific resources and inventive genius have been mobilized behind the defense program, he pointed out, and already more than 35,000 suggestions and inventions have been submitted to the National Inventors Council.

"For eighteen months the research of scientists and the ingenuity of inventors have been supplying the national arsenal. With the scientific minds and mechanical equipment put at its disposal, the National Defense Research Committee has already accomplished feats that will stifle the whole world, including the dictators, if the protection of American liberties requires their use."

NOW SHE SHOPS "CASH AND CARRY"
Without Painful Backache
Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys. The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or watery passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills and necessarily by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

West Sues For $687,000 Fees on Arms

New York, Nov. 24.—Suits for $687,000 claimed in commissions on $70,000,000 in war contracts has been filed by Charles West, one-time Assistant Secretary of the Interior and former Ohio Congressman, against the Empire Ordnance Corporation, which manufactures armaments for the Government.

In his action, originally brought in State Supreme Court and since transferred to Federal Court where it is now pending, West, who in Washington was once a contact man between Congress and the White House, declared the company had engaged him as an agent to get war contracts for a fee of 1 per cent of the gross sales of the company's products.

The complaint set forth, according to a spokesman for the law offices of Lincoln Epworth, West's attorney, that West entered into this arrangement about November 1, 1940, and that about four months later West agreed to accept $1000 a month on commissions due and that this amount was paid in March, April and May of this year.

West's counsel said that West alleged he received a total of about $13,000 from the date of the agreement to May, 1941, and contended that on the basis of 70 million dollars in orders, $687,000 was still owing West as business consultant and adviser for the Empire Corporation.

The corporation filed a general denial of West's allegations.

Auctioneer Charles West Sells Ex-Rep. Chas. West's House

The home of former Representative Charles West, of Ohio, at 208 Kennedy Drive, Kenwood, Bethesda, Md., was sold at auction yesterday to satisfy a $2781.50 judgment obtained by U. S. Treasurer W. S. Julian August 8 against West and his wife. The Wests had signed a promissory note for $2500 payable to Julian, who said the money was a loan.

The three-story, nine-room stone dwelling was knocked down by auctioneer Charles West, of Rockville, to S. E. Godden, of Washington, understood to be an agent for Julian, for $23,350. The sale was subject to a first trust of $16,250 and a second trust of approximately $4000. The auctioneer was not a relative of the former Congressman, Montgomery County, Md.

Fire Destroys Half Of Seward, Alaska, Business District

Seattle, Nov. 24 (AP)—Fire of undetermined origin last night and today destroyed half the business district of Seward, Alaska, southern terminus of the Alaska Railroad. Damage was not officially estimated.

Army Signal Corps officials said the blaze was brought under control at 10:30 a. m. today after destroying all the buildings on the east side of Fourth Avenue, main business thoroughfare, for a two-block distance. Soldiers from Fort Raymond helped fire fighters battle the fire.

Included in the destruction were the Alaska Steamship Co. office, the Gateway Publishing Co., the Arcade Building and numerous warehouses in the business buildings. No Army supplies were reported lost.

Seward, main port of Army traffic, already was faced with loss of much of its business due to development of Whittier as a railhead. Seward has a normal population of about 1000.

Special Police

Judge Neilson has earned the gratitude of all civilized residents of the city by his indignant denunciation of brutality by special policemen in Washington. Judge Neilson is a responsible public officer and is in a position to know the facts. Therefore his statement, that in two-thirds of the cases coming before the Police Court as the result of arrests by special officers the defendants show evidence of unmerciful beatings, is shocking beyond measure. He is absolutely right in saying that such wanton abuse of the authority delegated to such officers ought not to be tolerated.

Moreover, to judge from frequent complaints concerning the character and behavior of many of the special police, there has been gross negligence in the delegation of police authority. To avoid confusion and unjust connotation, it might be well to explain at this point that the "special police" to whom Judge Neilson was referring are not, of course, the admirably disciplined police organizations which guard the various departmental buildings. He was speaking of watchmen and others hired and paid by private corporations, but empowered to make arrests and permitted to carry the usual police weapons. It would be interesting to know how carefully, if at all, the qualifications of special police applicants are examined before their appointment.

Title 20, Chapter 3, Part 1, Section 466, of the Code of the District of Columbia reads:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on application of any corporation or individual, or in their own discretion, may appoint special policemen for duty in connection with the property of, or under the charge of, such corporation or individual... subject to such general regulations as the said Commissioners may prescribe. Another section authorizes the Commissioners to remove the powers of special policemen at their own discretion. Thus it would seem that both the responsibility for a situation of which Judge Neilson has so properly complained and responsibility for its correction rests squarely upon the Commissioners.

Britain's Libyan Drive

Just a week has gone by since the British launched their offensive in Libya. In comparison with the German-Italian drive of last spring the progress thus far made by Gen. Cunningham's forces appears slow-paced. Between March 24 and April 15 the German-Italian units in Libya traversed the region between El Agheila and the Egyptian border, recapturing, with the conspicuous exception of Tobruk, most of the territory previously won by the Army of the Nile.

A more accurate gauge of the present British advance is to be found, however, in a comparison between current operations and those carried out by Gen. Wavell around the turn of the year. Sidi Barrani was attacked on December 9. But Bardia, which the British recaptured two days ago, was not reached in the last offensive until January 3. The difference, of course, is that the British forces are very much stronger than they were nine months ago in terms of man power, airplanes and tanks. This time the Axis has not repeated the mistake of Gen. Graziani in maintaining large garrisons cooped up in desert fortresses with only limited communications between them. But the losses sustained by the Italians in the earlier fighting have never been made good.

It is true that the Italians have been stiffened by the addition of two or more German armored divisions whose strength was made all too evident to the British in the spring drive. And in June when the British launched an offensive from Egypt it was speedily beaten back with considerable losses of tanks and armored vehicles. But should the British now succeed in their announced purpose of destroying the German panzer units concentrated in eastern Libya, the road to Derna, Cyrene, Benghazi and possibly even Tripoli would be opened to them.

By its very nature the Libyan front has always been fluid and is more so now than ever. This time the British appear to have taken great pains to prepare their offensive. A considerable volume of British and American equipment was poured into Egypt during the five months of relative stalemate that preceded the present action. For the first time in any engagement with German troops something like an equality exists between the British and their principal enemy. They possess, moreover, the incalculably important factor of relatively unhampered sea power. The general feeling of confidence and optimism that exists in London over the outlook in Libya does not, judging by the events of the past week, appear to be unjustified.

Price Control

It is said that, although the price-control bill is at last under debate in the House, the chances for passage of an acceptable measure are very poor. The bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee would encourage inflation, not discourage it. For it makes no provision for regulation of wages, and would actually encourage a boost in prices of many farm products to levels far above parity. It would be next to impossible to whip this defective measure into acceptable shape by amendments offered from the floor of the House. Hence the Gore bill providing for a comprehensive "freezing" of prices and control of wages is being urged as an alternative.

Neither of these proposals is acceptable, however—the former for the reasons already mentioned and the latter because its comprehensive character would impose an impossibly heavy administrative burden upon the official or officials charged with enforcement of the law. Moreover, any attempt as would be involved in the Gore bill to "freeze" prices as of a given date, leaving adjustments for later determination, would not only be impracticable but undesirable. The aim of control should not be to immobilize the price structure, but to prevent prices from advancing when a rise is not warranted either by increasing production costs or by the necessity for stimulating production.

Selective price control does not preclude effective control over wages and other cost elements. Nor does it necessitate putting a ceiling over all wages. Wage adjustments may be required to take care of rising living costs, and to correct manifest injustices. However, it is essential to prevent adequately paid workers from using their bargaining power to obtain wage increases that would force production costs and hence prices constantly upward.

The administrator in charge of commodity price control will have a tremendously difficult enforcement task, even if his operations are limited to selective commodity price control. Consequently, wage control functions ought to be assigned to a separate agency or to another individual working in close cooperation with the official in charge of price control. In short, what we need is a thoroughgoing revision of the selective price control bill now before the House as well as supplementary legislation providing for selective, nonrigid wage controls.

Saving Small Business

To OPM's division of contract distribution falls the difficult task of spreading defense orders with the object of keeping many small concerns from closing down for lack of raw materials. In pursuance of this aim the division has been rapidly extending its system of regional offices. It has also sponsored defense production "clinics" in a few large cities to bring potential subcontractors into touch with prime Government contractors. At least 500 "clinics" of this sort have been planned.

A lot of field work is required to determine what equipment can be utilized or adapted to defense needs. Most small-business men need advice, moreover, as to how to qualify for Government contracts. It is estimated that there are about 130,000 small manufacturers in the United States employing fewer than twenty persons. Many of these are metal-working concerns which are especially hard hit by increasingly acute shortages of materials. This fact alone shows the importance of bringing the largest possible number of small business units into the defense program.

However, not all factories and mills engaged in producing nonessential civilian goods can change over to defense work. Some will either have to be supplied with materials to keep running as usual, or else be closed down. Floyd Odum, head of the Contract Distribution Division, has proposed that a small percentage of scarce materials be set aside monthly for the use of hard-pressed concerns employing not over twenty persons. SPAB's executive director, Donald M. Nelson, regards this plan as unworkable. He thinks that materials should be allocated to nondefense firms on a selective basis rather than the basis of size. SPAB is reported to have approved in principle the establishment of a "hardship pool" of materials; and it is expected that the Nelson plan will be followed.

Congress is rightfully concerned about the plight of small businesses, not only because wholesale closings would give rise to serious localized distress, but also because our small business units are typical of a competitive, democratic system of enterprise that we hope to preserve. A good many small business casualties will be unavoidable, since the demand of the defense program must take precedence whenever really critical shortages of strategic raw materials develop. Nevertheless, careful planning along the lines now being followed (assuming full cooperation from Army and Navy procurement officials) ought to reduce the business casualties of the defense program to a minimum. It should also make for a more complete and public-spirited participation of business in the work of defense.

Arlington Dispute

The hotel-versus-roads controversy in Arlington appears to have ended with complete victory for the Federal Government. Officials have definitely refused to adjust the pattern of roads that will serve the new War Department Building in order to permit the construction of a seven-million-dollar apartment hotel at Columbia Pike and Arlington Ridge Road. That, of course, is not surprising. They have an obligation to provide easy access to this immense structure which will house 20,000 Government workers. But the fact that the controversy ended in a stalemate of disagreement is far from being a happy augury.

A complete victory for Federal officials in this case has apparently been achieved over the vigorous opposition of the county authorities. That leaves much to be desired. For it is obvious that Arlington County is rapidly becoming in fact a part of the Nation's Capital. In the next controversy that arises the county may be in a position to say the final word. Unless a basis of good will and mutual understanding can be established, the development of that segment of the Capital south of the Potomac may be seriously hampered. Even in this case, moreover, the need for new housing in the vicinity of the mammoth War Department Building is no less acute than the need for access roads.

The Post has suggested before that the only basic solution for the conflict of interests in this area is to bring Arlington County back into the District of Columbia. It will inevitably be a part of the Capital City. So it ought to be under Federal jurisdiction. It may be a long time, however, before Congress will acknowledge its blunder of 1846 and ask Virginia to give up Arlington County once more. In the meantime harmony between Federal and Arlington County officials is of the utmost importance to orderly development of this new segment of the Capital.

Soldiers For Surinam

More than a year ago, in return for the transfer to her of 50 over-age American destroyers, Great Britain made available to the United States sites for American naval and air bases at various points in the British West Indies, British Guiana and Newfoundland. Together with existing American bases in Cuba, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands these new bases, now largely completed, have closed the gap which previously existed in our Atlantic defensive system. A further move in the same direction—one which is important for economic as well as strategic reasons—is the agreement just reached with the government of the Netherlands whereby American troops will be stationed in Surinam (Dutch Guiana) on the northern coast of South America.

The principal task which will be entrusted to these troops will be the protection of bauxite mines which furnish upward of 60 per cent of our requirements of that vital mineral. But the occupation of Surinam also gives the United States another foothold in a region close to the 1600-mile channel which separates Dakar from the bulge of South America. With the likelihood now increasing that the Vichy government may soon permit German troops, planes and submarines to use Dakar and Casablanca as bases from which to carry on war against the British and merchant shipping in the South Atlantic, Surinam acquires a new importance in the defense system of this hemisphere.

In this connection it is interesting to note that Brazil has been asked by the United States and the Netherlands to participate in this defense measure. Brazil is understood to be prepared to "contribute to the common aim by exercising an especial measure of military vigilance in the frontier zone adjacent to Surinam." The White House has also made it clear that the other American republics have been notified of the move. Their approval can be assumed. The defense of the Americas is in the interests of all.

SIESTA SONG

Ay, ay, under the mango tree
With the warm sun going higher
I have no desire!

My belly is full of tortillas.
From the hut I hear the sound
Of my Lupita singing to her nino.
I lie contented on the ground.

When the little moon hides her face
Behind a mantilla of cloud,
And the night bird seeks its mate
Calling loud,
When the hour comes
Of silence and sighs,
Then I shall seek the hut
And my Lupita's soft dark eyes.

But now I lie content
Feeling the cool wind creep
Like a little lizard up my sleeve,
Life a soft little lizard in my hair.
Sweet is approaching sleep.

Ay, ay, under the mango tree
With the warm sun going higher
I have no desire!

Housing Typo

Will you permit a correction in the report of a statement by me that appeared in The Post of November 22. The text of the paragraph upon which the headlines were based indicates a typographical error by which $2000 was changed to $3000 though the correct figure was given four lines below. The headlines were, "Housing Plan May Include $3000 Class. Family of Such Yearly Income Held Not Able to Pay $55-$60 Monthly."

In response to a question from the audience I said that the lowest income for which private enterprise can build in the District of Columbia is $2000. This statement has been made repeatedly during the past two years, and so far as I know has not been challenged. It was first made publicly at a Washington Housing Association meeting attended by persons interested in all phases of building.

It is commonly held that a rent which does not exceed one-quarter of income is a proper rent for a family in this income group. This means a monthly rent of $41 or $42. Therefore $55 to $60 is too high. The question as to $3000 incomes has to do with the ability of defense workers in this group to find vacant dwellings. A recent report showed only some 90-odd vacant houses and apartments in Washington for rent at $50 a month or less. At $80 there were a few more, but so few that they mean nothing in a city the size of Washington, and one where defense needs are adding rapidly to the population. Defense housing may be either private or public. The intent is that the greater part shall be privately financed and built. But private builders must keep under a $50 rental ceiling established by OPM. So $55 to $60 rents are not in the present defense housing picture, despite the fact that some defense workers have incomes of $3000.

Shopping Advice

I understand that Clark Griffith is going shopping three weeks hence. That is fine, but he should be sure to make a good selection—at least an improvement over last year. He should also consider the manager. He should aim to do a little more effective coaching, get rid of all obstacles in the way. By the way, we might even need a new manager.

Let's not make the same mistake in shopping as last year. Why not profit by last year's mistake? Let's have a hot team this year so maybe we will win a pennant sometime. We did, however, finish last year a little better than usual (in the sixth place).

Culture Lockout

After having spent four months in Washington, I am amazed at the evident indifference of higher authorities for the advancement of Washington's superb cultural facilities.

Now with thousands of newcomers pouring into this city it would seem an excellent opportunity to open the doors of the museums, libraries, and famous public buildings after normal working hours, and allow Government workers to relax, and enjoy their leisure time in places meant for relaxation and enjoyment. It seems a pity that many of us cannot take advantage of the opportunity to visit these places, because of 5 o'clock closings, and very limited Sunday visiting hours, if the buildings are open at all.

Hitler's Intent

The two common fallacies doing immeasurable harm to China's cause among leaders of public opinion in the U. S. A. are:

1. Hitler wants war between Japan and the United States.

2. Aid to Britain or Russia is more urgent than aid to China.

Hitler is mortally afraid that the ABCD powers are going to join their military, naval and air forces in combat against the mediocre Japanese forces, destroy them and have a free field of action against the Nazis in Europe and the Near East.

What single catastrophe could be greater for Hitler than the release of the United States fleet in the Pacific and all the British, Dutch and Russian forces now in the Far East so that they can be used against him?

Hitler has only the greatest contempt for the Imperial Japanese army, navy and air force. He knows they cannot possibly stay in action for more than a few months against the combined ABCD forces in the Far East.

Nazi circles in Chungking told Chinese officials many times that Hitler would never let Japan fight the United States. He wanted the Japs to threaten and bluster and insult the Americans just enough to prevent any move of the United States fleet from the Pacific to the Atlantic—but never enough to start actual hostilities.

The crafty Hitler is behind the present Japanese peace moves and the "discussions" with Washington. From his viewpoint it's a master stroke of politics to have Japan "renounce" its Axis Alliance if that would prevent actual war between Japan and the United States.

The U. S. A., knowing it could never put faith in any kind of a bargain with the Japanese, would not dare to transfer its mighty fleet from the Pacific to the Atlantic regardless of what sort of an agreement was reached. Hence, "adjustment of relations between Japan and the United States" would continue to tie up the United States fleet in the Pacific indefinitely—which is just what Hitler wants.

China is still the "poor cousin" in the democratic family. Bombers are being flown to England in a constant stream and thence on to Russia, but the plain fact of the matter is that the U. S. A. is still stalling a good deal where China is concerned. I suppose the Chinese ought to be and are grateful for the observers, doctors, road inspectors and other Americans going to China to give advice and comfort at the expense of the United States Government. But in my opinion it is far from enough. Some fighter planes and flares have been sent to China but even after her jugular vein has been cut. It is essential to America's security in the Pacific that the Chinese be given the materials and personnel to stop the Japanese and keep the Burma Road in operation.

EARL H. LEAF,

Real Menace

I heard a prominent member of the America First Committee state his case the other evening. The sum and substance of it was, of course, that the chief enemies of America are the British and the President of the United States. Hitler was laughed off as a minor character, and no enemy of this country. The real menace is "right here at home!"

All of this was familiar, but there was one touch I had not often heard before, Washington, the Capital of the Nation, and the seat of the elected Government, was always sneeringly referred to as "Washingtonian America."

We elect representatives to be sent to Washington, to help with the governing of the Nation, and determining policies. It happens that the Wisconsin Representatives, with the exception of one man, vote systematically on the side which the Axis openly and at great expense sponsors. They may be adequately representing the opinion of the people of this State, taken all in all. Those of us who support the Administration out here may really be in a ratio of 1 to 12, as the voters in Washington usually are. But these Wisconsin legislators are always in the minority, taking the Nation all in all—the Nation as it is represented in "Washingtonian America." And if they are sound citizens of this country, they accept their minority position, and permit their majority to function.

But this sneering talk about "Washingtonian America" from the Wisconsin minority and their supporters here, is secession talk. It is talk designed to split the country into two warring groups, the smaller one making it impossible for the larger one to function. It is the kind of stuff out of which civil wars are made. And it reveals that those who in all this do not believe in representative government—the sort of government in which the individual abides by the will of the majority as it is expressed in elections, after full and open discussion of the issues and men involved. The "America" which those who scoff at "Washingtonian America" represent, is a minority America; and they have no right to sabotage the program of the plain majority of the people.

Labor Dangers

The greatest of all Frankenstein's was created when the New Deal party received from union labor a half-million-dollar contribution and provided in response to same the Wagner Act, the National Labor Relations Board and favorable action at every turn. The chickens have come home to roost, not upon the New Deal party but upon the American people in the form of unreasonable strikes. This is particularly unfortunate at a time when patriotic endeavor is being exerted for national defense. Labor strikes are illegitimate whenever they are accompanied by the use of force or coercion in an attempt to secure an increase in the wage scale above the normal rates fixed by supply and demand, and consequently the disadvantage of the 90 per cent of workers who are not organized.

Closed shops violate the freedom of American citizenship. Agreement to this plan by employers does not change that fact. They deny employment to all not belonging to a certain union, and compel the employer to discharge all who are delinquent in the payment of union dues. Union labor dues are now estimated to aggregate over a billion dollars annually, in that way sustaining union labor with the income and the power of a principality, a serious danger to the Nation. The Post Impressionist

Early Shopping

Sally and I love Christmas and we love Washington. It is only when we have to cope with both of them at once that we verge on murderous insanity. We have come merrily through the vicissitudes of working side by side in, day out, in the same office, with not more than occasional snarls at each other which are quickly understood and forgotten.

This year Sally said that instead of just talking about it, we should actually do our shopping early. It was the only smart thing to do, she said. It was unfortunate that she was seized with this wonderful idea on a payday Saturday; however, I was dauntless fool enough to take her up on it.

"I wonder, now, if Mother would like—" I began, searching for something along the wistaria or lilac line. Immediately the salesgirl thrust a little item called "Oriental Madness" into my hand. "Just what you're looking for," she cooed. "You don't know my mother," I sighed, turning away from temptation.

I discovered Sally elbow deep in costume jewelry. We examined 32 pins, 28 necklaces and 17 bracelets before deciding none of them was just our type. I consulted my list, and came up with, "Aunt Miriam—gloves."

"I'll meet you at the glove counter, I've got to get a scarf for Sis," said Sally, just before the crowd swallowed her. After a ten-minute wait with no sign of encouragement from a salesgirl, I smothered a Mitiquetost-ish quail and murmured, "I believe I'm next..." Immediately, down upon my unsuspecting head came the wrathful politeness which only salesgirls can administer successfully. "Sorry, madam, I'll get to you as soon as I can."

My ears sizzled. I skulked away, dawdling for a fraction of an instant at a pocketbook table. Three clerks ambushed me immediately, anxious to serve.

"Just looking?" I mumbled, and rushed off to find Sally. She was nowhere in sight. Frantically I charged up and down the aisles, peering and poking. Useless. Sally was gone. Finally, weak and trembling, I dashed through the glove counter to find Sally idly foot-tapping. Had I ever liked this woman? I asked myself in amazement, as we moved off together, two against the world.

I settled on a pocketbook for Aunt Miriam, despairing of the glove counter, and Sally bought a tricky belt for herself. I bought Christmas cards, forgetting that I'd promised to get them from the woman next door, and then we both took time out for banana splits. The hat counters waylaid Sally next, and I told her to get on or off her head—and I waited while she tried on seven and bought none.

Then I bought a sweater for myself, not sure I liked it after I'd paid for it, and mentally explaining that I could always give it away if it didn't suit when I got it home. We both bought two compact mirrors—"You can always use them for that present for somebody who gives you something and you didn't expect it!"—and then I saw a brief opening at the glove counter, presided over by an unoccupied clerk. I dashed through, shouted my request, returning triumphantly to Sally with the gloves falling out of their wrappings. "For Aunt Miriam."

"You're giving her a pocketbook?" remembered Sally sweetly. "I'll give that to Mother," I said quickly. "Now where?"

"I haven't accomplished anything," Sally complained. "All I've done is show you how you can't. Before I could make an indignant refutation of this statement, she spied a hat she had missed—Heaven knows how—on a previous look-around. She was off. I slipped my feet unobtrusively out of my shoes, almost expecting to see steam come pouring out, while Sally adjusted the hat this way and that, frowning and quizzical. She asked my advice and I told her to get it. It was lovely. So she shook her head, put it back, and came away again without making a purchase.

"Sure a crowd," sighed Sally. "Do you suppose they're all defense workers?"

"If you ask me, they're offense workers right now," I said in grim jest.

"I-ha-ha," said Sally, flatly. "Very funny. Well, I don't know about you, but I'm ready to go home."

"I was ready an hour ago," I told her snappishly. "Let's take the same cab and I'll walk the two blocks from your house—barefooted, probably. Or I'll go to bed with my I'll even fear loose from an extra dime and ride that two blocks."

Sally was uninterested in my plans. She strode ahead, brutally climbing over anybody who stood in her path. The revolving door flung us out even more precipitately than it had flung us in, and we climbed into a cab with bundles dripping from our arms. The cab lurched and thrashed forward on her mouth, and she saw it, taking revenge at once with, "You've lost your own gloves, dear."

I hadn't the energy to start up in dismay. Instead, I said hopelessly, "Well, I'll keep the ones I got Aunt Miriam and give her the pocketbook for Mother and come back to get Mother's present when I get the rest of my things."

The driver turned around and said pleasantly, "Been Christmas shopping already, huh? That's right—the only way to get out of a lot of grief, isn't it! I'm telling my wife she better get started right away. Looks like a big Christmas."

"Yes," said Sally politely. I sat on in screaming silence.

"Christmas comes only once a year," sighed the cab driver philosophically.

"God be praised!" I murmured from the toes of my tormented feet. Sally looked full at me for the first time in several hours, and I saw that her nose was as shiny as my own and that she had chewed all over her lipstick off. She laughed, and I laughed with her, and once more we were in complete accord. We laughed harder, and suddenly the cab lurched again and this time we both bumped our heads.

"Next time," I said, wincing with pain, "next time we'll start on the Fourth of July."

"If we live till then," said Sally, nursing her bruises.

Is The War At Stalemate?

MR. HOOVER, and now Senator Tydings, have been telling us that the real question before us is whether we shall raise an army of five to eight million men and send them to fight Hitler in Europe. What makes them think that this is the real question? They have explained why they think it is. They believe that the war is at a stalemate. It is not.

Believing that this is a true picture of the military situation, they are convinced that we need no longer worry about Hitler's breaking out of the encirclement. The only thing we need worry about, they think, is whether, against a Hitler already securely held down in Europe, we should pay the terrible price of sending an expeditionary force to invade Europe. They think, in other words, that Hitler's offensive power is already checked, that the defensive resistance of the Allies is already successful, and that nothing remains for us but to decide whether to let Hitler stew in his own juice or to knock him out.

UNFORTUNATELY Mr. Hoover and Mr. Tydings are taking a fantastically optimistic view of the military situation. For it is the height of wishful optimism to suppose that the offensive power of the Axis has already been successfully checked and that the defensive resistance is now firm and reliable. If we were in any such happy position, the worst of our anxieties would be over.

Our anxieties are not over. The evidence that the situation is not stabilized at a stalemate with Hitler locked up in Europe is that both in the Far East and in French Africa—on two sides of us and in both oceans—there is an extreme crisis in which the fundamental issue is whether Hitler is to get the use of Japanese and of French sea power. Mr. Hoover's reassuring idea that the German army cannot break out of continental Europe completely overlooks the obvious reality that Hitler is making a gigantic effort, not without a good chance of success, to get the use of the very powerful Japanese navy and the very considerable French navy.

In Mr. Hoover's estimate of the situation, there is no mention and no slightest evidence that he is aware of the significance of Japan or of France, and no effort to discuss candidly with the American people the importance of Hitler's efforts to supplement the power of the German army with two great navies and their naval bases in both oceans. Yet what is the point of talking as if the German army were securely locked up in Europe at the very moment when Hitler is exerting extreme pressure upon Tokyo and upon Vichy to lend him their naval power in the Pacific and the Atlantic?

IF THERE were any truth in the Hitler-Tydings picture of the military situation, there is no mention and no slightest evidence that he is aware of the significance of Japan or of France, and no effort to discuss candidly with the American people the importance of Hitler's efforts to supplement the power of the German army with two great navies and their naval bases in both oceans. Yet what is the point of talking as if the German army were securely locked up in Europe at the very moment when Hitler is exerting extreme pressure upon Tokyo and upon Vichy to lend him their naval power in the Pacific and the Atlantic?

Engineering Feats

CIVIL ENGINEERS are distinguished by their dislike of public attention. Few of us know of the outstanding engineering feats performed in South America by American engineers. Still less do we know of construction undertakings by South American engineers.

The Bolivian engineer Juan Rivera Torres leaves for his home. Director General of the Bolivian Railroads, he, together with Luis Alberto Waskely, an outstanding Brazilian engineer, are on the way to complete the most important railroad link in South America. When completed, a steel road of over 2700 miles will unite Rio de Janeiro with Asuncion, Chile, through Santos, Corumbá (close to the Brazilian border), Santa Cruz and La Paz in Bolivia.

The Brazilian side of the construction was completed two months ago when President Vargas of that country inaugurated the road reaching to the very border with its neighbor Bolivia, about 100 kilometers west of Corumbá.

The Bolivian engineer leaves today after signing an order for 1800 tons of rails to be delivered by the United States in the very near future. Of the 700 miles of rails still to be laid, a good portion has already been provided with foundations.

This means that in three years from now manufactured products from Brazil, coffee, rubber, etc., will reach the temperate zones of Chile and Bolivia within a week or ten days. Bolivian oil will be delivered in Brazil and Chile in still shorter time. The commerce between those countries has been neglected because of transportation delays amounting to four and five weeks via the Strait of Magellan or the Panama Canal. In case of blockades the transcontinental road will be of enormous significance and without a doubt a vital link in defense of the hemisphere.

Industrialists and manufacturers in South America were critical of the United States when seeing themselves short of essential materials due to slow delivery. To the latter remarks would seem to indicate that Hitler, in the event of a decisive victory over Britain, is planning to lay all England under his Norwegian gauntlet. This may sound somewhat fantastic, but it is certain that the Norwegian Quislings have been promised at least some territorial gains from the British Isles, plus two Atlantic islands now under American protection. For this, we have Quisling's own authority, who, a few weeks after his speech in the Colosseum, told another Nazi meeting in Oslo:

"I am wide possibilities are open for us. I have no doubt that we, after Britain has been defeated, shall get our old possessions back. Svalbard (Spitzbergen), Greenland, Iceland, the Orkney Islands will be ours again, so that we shall feel safe in our own living space."

ROUNDING UP this picture of boundless territorial aspirations, the Norwegian press recently reported a curious exchange of letters between Quisling and one of his sub-leaders. Capt. Prytz, who is now the administrative head of South Trondelag. It seems that Prytz, at the outbreak of the Soviet war, wrote Quisling a letter in which he set forth his qualifications for the governorship of Kola Peninsula. Quisling replied that he would be only too glad to invest his old friend with the post, if and when the Germans, as he expected, turned the peninsula over to his civil administration.

Little is known in South American cities of the activities of American investigators but those natives who have merited the trust of the scrutineers have become valuable in helping reach the ultimate goal: elimination of European parasites, or America for the Americans and no substitutes!

PAN-AMERICAN AIRWAYS, a private enterprise which today truly could be called the American Good-Will Air-fleet, is receiving more and more landing concessions all over Latin America. From a pioneer of air defense in the Americas and as such its technical personnel is forming the skeleton of a future air power that will aid the South American nations to an era of peaceful development.

Six hundred miles off the coast of Ecuador, less than four hours flight by Pan-American planes, lie the much discussed and interesting Galapagos Islands, owned by Ecuador. The name of the group of islands comes from the giant land porpoises found there. The numerous volcanic islands however have each their own name, a good many of them reminiscent of the romantic era of buccaners and whalers. Indefatigable James and Charles Duncan, Chatham, Bindloe, Jarvis and Albemarle are some of the names and each one of them carries a tall, white lighthouse. Filibusters and pirates could not afford to be seen often along the main-coast of South America, and the Galapagos were a convenient stop-over for securing water and provisions. Those cliffs had then a strategic importance, and they still have it today for those boys could not only make air-bases in emergencies but also serve as convenient hiding places for Axis vessels pirating in American waters.

Neither the United States Government nor the Pan-American Airways has approached the Ecuadorian Government for permission to establish landing places in the Galapagos, but we have good reasons to know such a request would be readily granted. Democratic Ecuador is 100 per cent for Pan-American cooperation and eager to do its part in the defense of the Hemisphere. Incidentally, those islands are about 1000 miles from the Panama Canal Zone and form a vital link in the defense of that thoroughfare.

Quisling's Empire

By Joachim Joesten

Norway To Be A Nazi Spearhead

"IF GERMANY goes down, we follow after. If Germany wins, unheard-of possibilities open up for us."

In these words, Vidkun Quisling's own paper, Fritt Folk, accurately summed up the situation in an editorial dated September 11, 1941.

What will happen to the original Quisling and his kind elsewhere, after an Allied victory, is easy enough to guess. But the "unheard-of possibilities" he dreams of, if and when his master should win the war—what are they?

Several indications of Hitler's plans for north Europe after the war have seeped through these last few weeks. They point to the creation of a vast North Germanic federation under the leadership of Vidkun Quisling, within the framework of Adolf Hitler's great German Reich. The boundaries of this federation of vassal states are to reach far beyond the present frontiers of Scandinavia.

The first clear announcement of these plans came from Quisling himself as he spoke to a Nazi rally in the Colosseum Hall at Oslo on September 5. In the course of his address, Quisling several times attacked Sweden, which, he considered, was "lagging a century behind his time."

"Otherwise," he went on, "we may well see a revival of the centuries-old rivalry between the Swedish and Norwegian nations. We Norwegians haven't forgotten yet Bohuslan, Jamtland and Harjedalen."

IT WAS NOT the first, nor the last, time that the Norwegian Nazis broadly hinted at irredentist claims of Swedish territory. Only a few days later, Quisling's minister of propaganda, Gunder Lund, raised the same issue in these words: "The Norwegian nation must not forget that Norway's eastern boundaries once ran along the River Gota, beyond Jamtland and Harjedalen, and in the west beyond England and in the Normandy. The time may come when Norway's living space again will be what it once has been."

The latter remarks would seem to indicate that Hitler, in the event of a decisive victory over Britain, is planning to lay all England under his Norwegian gauntlet. This may sound somewhat fantastic, but it is certain that the Norwegian Quislings have been promised at least some territorial gains from the British Isles, plus two Atlantic islands now under American protection.

For this, we have Quisling's own authority, who, a few weeks after his speech in the Colosseum, told another Nazi meeting in Oslo:

"I am wide possibilities are open for us. I have no doubt that we, after Britain has been defeated, shall get our old possessions back. Svalbard (Spitzbergen), Greenland, Iceland, the Orkney Islands will be ours again, so that we shall feel safe in our own living space."

A.F.L. Witness Lied, Bridges' Counsel Says

By the Associated Press

Defense counsel challenged the Government's evidence yesterday in a hearing on a deportation warrant against Harry Bridges. West Coast C. I. O. had alleged that the testimony of only two of the witnesses concerning Bridges' alleged Communist affiliation was considered.

Richard Gladstein, representing Bridges, declared during argument before the Immigration Board of Appeals that the testimony of other witnesses was either false or lacked the force necessary to make it worthy of consideration.

He said that in general the Government had not offered evidence of sufficient weight to justify a deportation order.

Much of Gladstein's argument was directed against a key Government witness at the San Francisco hearing, Harry Lundeberg, an A. F. of L. union official on the West Coast.

Earlier the Government had contended through Albert Del Guercio, an immigration attorney, that Lundeberg had never lied to the Government, but had hesitated at testifying against Bridges because he

Here, then, we have the contours of Quisling's coming empire. From Davis Strait to the White Sea, from Spitzbergen to the River Gota, deep in the heart of Sweden.

AMERICANS, in particular, will be interested to learn that Hitler is planning to set up Quisling as master of Greenland. That these plans have already begun to take shape was dramatically illustrated last month by the "Busko" incident. That Nazi-led vessel, caught sniping around the fjords of East Greenland, was manned by Norwegians, not Danes. The man who had equipped the "Busko" expedition was none other than Professor Adolf Hoel, head of the "Arctic Office" in Oslo, a Greenlander of old standing and a Quisling man since September last year.

On October 17, only a few days after the U. S. Navy had seized the "Busko"—Professor Hoel stood on a tribune in the Nazi Party building at Tonsberg holding forth on "Norway's interests in the Arctic Ocean." "It is our firm hope and belief," he said, "that Norway's interests in the Arctic region will be safeguarded at the coming peace conference. What matters is that our claims are ready and substantiated, and to this problem our present government is giving full attention."

In the same address, Professor Hoel had censured the British raid on Spitzbergen and berated the Hague arbitration of 1933 which awarded to Denmark the full sovereignty over Greenland.

Professor Hoel is one of Quisling's closest friends and collaborators. Since last September, he has been rector of Oslo University, succeeding to this post after professor Dirlik Arup Selp, a loyal Norwegian, had been forced by Reichskommissar Terboven.

RECURRENT REPORTS that Quisling has lost favor with his German masters are definitely contradicted by latest developments. It is quite true that the German military authorities in Norway, and in particular General von Falkenhorst, have persistently opposed any further extension of Quisling's sphere of influence.

But von Falkenhorst now fights on the Russian front and has been reported killed. Quisling's friend Terboven holds all the reins of power in Norway. He has succeeded in convincing Hitler that Quisling is the right man to head a northern confederation of vassal states.

These plans took shape at a "Northern National-Socialist Congress" which was held at Oslo early last month. The congress, presided over by Quisling, was attended by representatives of the Nazi Party of Denmark, Sweden, Holland and Belgium. A resolution was passed to the effect that after this war a "Northern Germanic National-Socialist Federation" shall be born in Oslo as its capital and "Vidkun Quisling as Fuehrer. As preliminary steps towards this goal it was decided to set up, in Oslo, a "Nordic National-Socialist Samfund" (Northern Nazi Union) and to issue an inter-Scandinavian Nazi paper.

It is clear enough, then, that Hitler has chosen Quisling as a spearhead for the nazification of North Europe. Denmark, Holland and Belgium, all under the Nazi heel, will have little to say about the matter. Sweden, "Order." Sweden, as yet independent (within certain limits) is expected to follow suit, or face the consequences. The whole scheme stands or falls, of course, with the victory or defeat of Hitlerism in Europe.

The Weyand Ouster

(After reading the effusive language at both ends.)
"You are a soldier glorious," The Vichy chieftain said. As he held Weyand by the foot And kicked him in the head; "Yes, glorious is just the word," He went on with a tear, "That's why you're leaving here!"

II
"Ah, Marshal, you do flatter me," Said Weyand, bowing low, "I truly am not good enough To merit such a blow! You are so very kind to me, Oh, noble boss of France, I hardly need to mind it as You kick me in the pants."

III
"A most devoted Frenchman, you—
A military ace," Thus spoke Petain, and deftly dropped The general into space; "Nobility that equals yours Is very rare, 'tis true," And, saying this, he up and tossed His coat and hat out, too.

IV
"I don't deserve such lofty praise," Said Weyand to the boss; "I cannot be so valiant that I rate this double cross! 'I've done my duty, I admit, But, ah, my Henri, dear, In giving me the works like this You are too good I fear.'"

"Tut! Tut! I know your merits well," The white-haired Marshal purred; "To contradict me when I pay This tribute is absurd, I am consumed by love of you, As all true Frenchmen are, Else how could I with words like these Throw anyone so far?"

VI
"Such confidence! It is too much," Said Weyand cheerfully, "To do all this to me! 'Profound, yes, is my gratitude— With joy I'd like to dance . . . But still I have time to say Is Mercé! . . . Vive la France!'"

Congress Evades Strike Legislation

WHAT A MISERABLE, fumbling, timid aggregation of political trimmers and panhandlers our Congress is these days when it is openly said and never denied, because it is wretchedly true, that the law-making body of a Nation which purports to be the greatest republic on earth is afraid to pass any law that would place decent restraints on an organized mob of racketeers and dictators because the President won't give the high sign.

The President of the United States is not the legislative body. He is the Executive, what the general manager, the chairman of the board and he has no right to give orders to Congress but a duty to take orders and execute them. Congress has a duty to issue such orders and the members of both Houses are guilty of a crime against the people and the American form of government when they deliberately refuse to perform their job. The President's advice may be sought and respected but there was no intention ever that he should tell Congress what laws it must pass and what laws it must refrain from passing.

NEVERTHELESS the National Legislature of the United States, under the rule of President Roosevelt, has abdicated its powers. Its duty and all but the petty rewards of office and is now so far gone, in whining, yellow submission to the rule of the boss that the members openly admit that all legislation must have the approval of the White House. The French Parliament was rotten at the end and perished of its own poison but the pathetic crowd of flabby political slob who are selling out the American people today at the price of their contemptible patronage jobs and Treasury handouts with which to buy their own reelection, aren't much better, if any. They talk of the robbery, extortion, physical brutality and arrogant suppression of citizen's plain rights by groups of thugs, spies and anti-American conspirators in the service of the Kremlin and they conduct investigations which prove their worst gossip and suspicions. But, in all the years of the Roosevelt Presidency, not one law have they had the honor and manhood to enact which would trim the powers of these undisguised rascals. They send out sycops to the ends of the country to dig up evidence which can be found in any newspaper any day. They drag witnesses to Washington to give irrefutable and undisputed evidence of the viciousness which is corrupting the whole Nation; they draft bills. They argue and then, having discovered the foul truth which whimpers like a kennel of curs because the President won't give them his gracious permission to do their obvious duty. There are said to be some men in both Houses in whom self-respect and honesty are not quite dead but if so they are so inexcusably docile or dumb that all few of them together can't even raise a row. And all of those appalling frauds who clown it before the country as friends of labor are, on the contrary, traitors to the interests and rights of the very people whom they profess to serve best and have sold them down the river to as vile and greedy a lot of slave-drivers as ever laid the lash on the cringing Uncle Toms of ante-bellum days.

FOR YEARS now they have known that the C. I. O. was a political organization, which courted the Communists and raised them to positions of dangerous power over millions of decent American citizens. They observed that the C. I. O. unions were knifing American soldiers and sailors and the American people in the back with fraudulent strikes and slowdowns up to the time of Hitler's attack on Russia but then turned to with gaudy cries of patriotic purpose. They saw Mrs. Roosevelt come into their midst and deliberately insult them and the people whom they are supposed to represent by coddling a batch of fractious coils of the Trojan Horse. They know and admit that millions of dollars have been wrung from the sweat of common breadwinners by the most audacious and rapacious gang of thieves that ever preyed on humankind. They know that the laws known as labor's gains are, in fact, labor's chains and that the so-called labor policy of the President is a policy of political conspiracy with the bosses of the unions.

It isn't that the United States Congress lacks information or the authority to restore freedom to the people and destroy this monstrous outrage. These aren't the lack. What the United States Congress lacks is guts and when the flag of the new order is unfurled it should contain a broad yellow streak in memory of the men who sold their country out for a few lousy jobs.

Americas Should Know One Another, B.P.W. Told

Better understanding among American nations of each other's national life is necessary to a long range policy of peaceful relations in the New World, William Lytle Schurz, assistant chief of the Division of Cultural Relations in the State Department, said at the dinner of the Business and Professional Women's Club last night.

Among projects for furthering such understanding, arrangements are now being made for the translation of a large number of United States books into Spanish and Portuguese for circulation in the Latin American countries, he said.

Cooperation of the Division of Cultural Relations with the Coordinator of the Office of Inter-American Affairs in numerous projects was pointed out.

He stressed the importance of the exchange of students, professors and other intellectual leaders among the Americas. He spoke at the club's meeting at the Washington Club.

Other speakers included Miss Mary Agnes Brown, an attorney in the office of the solicitor of the Veterans Administration, and Dr. Esther Neira de Calvo, Panama's delegate to the Inter-American Commission of Women.

Miss Brown, who attended summer school at the University of Mexico last summer, appeared in the colorful native costume of that country.

She emphasized that the United States can not have a successful good will program unless it has knowledge of its neighbors. Miss Brown stressed the richness of the Latin American heritage—its traditions of democracy and in its culture.

In the eleventh century in Catalonia, the Duke of Barcelona gave a charter of liberties to the people, she pointed out. This seed of democracy is often overlooked, because of the later Magna Carta in England, she added. But remembrance of the Catalanian document should make Anglo-Saxon people a little more humble, she said.

Latin American folk music is so rich that the United States has much to learn from it, Miss Brown said. The people of those countries have a love of music and dancing, and they express themselves freely in those ways, so that the arts permeate the life of the people, she said.

Mrs. Laura Waters, club president, presided at the dinner.

No date has been set for the wedding.

Scouts Need Leadership Meeting Told

With approximately 1000 girls in the District on the waiting list to become Girl Scouts, the need for adult leaders to expand the membership was stressed by Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, national vice president in a city-wide leaders' meeting last night at Pierce Hall.

Pointing out that the Girl Scouts are building for the future as well as serving in the present emergency, Mrs. Glenn said that the organization has need of the best adult leadership that the community has to offer.

She emphasized that a community supports the Girl Scouts when it understands the value of their program. Mrs. Glenn outlined the long-range program which the organization set up at its national convention recently in Dallas.

She pointed out that nutrition, good health, the ability to take care of oneself—which are being stressed in civilian defense activities—have long been in the Scout program. Training in citizenship and in appreciation of the American way of life also are traditional with the Scouts, she pointed out.

Scout leaders from Alexandria, Arlington and Prince Georges County, as well as a group from the District, attended. Mrs. M. V. Velde, president of the Leaders' Association, was in charge of the meeting.

The event, from 2 to 6 p. m., is sponsored by the board of managers of which Mrs. Harry Hoskinson is president. The 62 aged men and women now at the home are among more than 300 who have made their home there during the 52 years of its history.

Mrs. Ivan J. Riley, general chairman, will be assisted by the following subchairmen: Mrs. J. Stanley Long, tea room; Mrs. Hugh Jones, refreshments; Mrs. W. E. Waite, hospitality; Mrs. W. W. Harlow, supplies; Mrs. Edward M. Hall, cash contributions; Mrs. Howell Bartle and members of the reading circle, candy; Mrs. J. Neutrality Out, Mrs. Tillett Tells Democratic Women

"It is our job as Democratic leaders to bring home to the American people that America has no neutral course in the world situation. Not to act is to cast our lot with Hitler," Mrs. Charles W. Tillett, assistant chairman of the Democratic National Committee, told the Women's National Democratic Club at its luncheon yesterday.

Speaking on "National Defense and Our Responsibility as Democratic Women," Mrs. Tillett said: "If defense is to be total, if every ounce of power that abides in our whole people is to be utilized, nothing can be clearer than that patriotic service begins in the home."

"Here are patriotic tasks which stand ready for the work of our hands and no other hands than ours—the planning of wholesome, well-balanced food, the guarding of spiritual welfare, the insuring of continued good health, the avoidance of waste in any form," she said.

Urges Broadening Of Defense Effort

"The present moment in the history of American homes is far from being the most disheartening . . . It is, on the contrary, the most inspiring. We will not plow new fields, but we must plow deeper. This is an inspiring opportunity for every American woman to lift the monotony of her daily tasks to the high plane of nobility."

"But women must not confine their efforts for total defense to work in the home. With a growing consciousness of the gigantic task our country must perform, each American woman must find an effective place for intelligent action in her community," Mrs. Tillett urged.

As channels through which women can give service, she mentioned public health work, social security and old age security management, child guidance, mental hygiene clinics, air raid protection, home nursing courses, registration bureaus for entertainment for service men, recreation.

Mrs. Tillett urged also that women be on their guard against subversive influences and rumors in their communities.

Rumor Spreaders Help Hitler

"Women are the eyes and ears and often the tongues of a community. In the course of a day, each woman comes in contact with friends, neighbors, tradesmen, businessmen—a wide variety of people in her community. If she is gullible, she becomes the tool of Hitler in spreading false rumors; if she is a real American seeking patriotic service, she will challenge these rumors," she said.

Mrs. Tillett was introduced by Judge Lucy S. Howorth, member of the Board of Veterans Appeals. Mrs. Curtis Shears, president of the club, presided.

Pen Women Map Program

Mrs. H. Lyle Campbell, president of the District branch, National League of American Pen Women, has appointed Bertha Shanks Chaney, first vice president, chairman of defense, to head the program which members are planning.

The branch is already using defense stamps in all prize contests conducted by the creative groups. Mrs. Campbell is sponsoring a story contest with an American theme, also giving defense stamps as prizes.

Mrs. Chaney plans one fellowship tea to center around contributions of bags of buttons for the children of England, where button factories are being taken over for other purposes.

Another tea will be designated for contributions of magazines for the U. S. O. Members of the district will paint posters announcing all defense activities.

The District branch held a business meeting last night, at the studio. After a short business session, Mathilde Young gave an account of the new Children's Museum of Washington.

The drama group, J. Jeune Carter, chairman, will meet tonight at the studio, at 8 o'clock. Scenes written by members will be read under the direction of the authors who will assign parts.

Good Nutrition Will Help You Get Luxuries

This is the first of a series of articles on how to maintain good nutrition in the home in the face of mounting living costs.

By Ida Jean Kain

THE HIGH cost of living is a threat to your nutritional standards—even with increased income. Surveys have shown that extra money goes for a better place to live, a new car, clothes, almost anything except better nutrition!

That's a mistake. Nutrition is power and it can be put to work for you. If I could only convince you that adequate amounts of the vital foods can actually help your husband to get a raise in pay, your children to grow taller and make higher grades in school, and you to feel like a new woman, I do not believe you would let anything stop you from taking advantage of the science of nutrition. And if all that isn't living life on a higher plane, tell me what is!

Probably the most phenomenal result of an adequate diet is its extension of the productive period of life. A man's best years can be extended by a decade. Instead of slowing up in his 40's he can go strong in his 50's. The effect on health and efficiency, however, is quickly discernible. This has proved to be true in industries which have made a practice of serving one adequate meal a day to the workers.

Growing Taller

Thanks to the advance in nutrition, children generally are growing taller nowadays—they are averaging several inches more height than the preceding generations. And the innovation of the school lunch plan for malnourished children has been amazingly effective. When children have failed to get the right kind of food, they are inattentive, take longer to think, have poor memory, and are easily fatigued mentally and physically. After a short time on adequate lunches, their grades jump as much as 10 per cent.

The benefits to the homemaker are just as great. A case in point is that of a middle-aged woman who had been on inadequate menus most of her life. After following scientifically planned menus for a few months she started to feel so good that she went around saying, "Why, I am just beginning to live!"

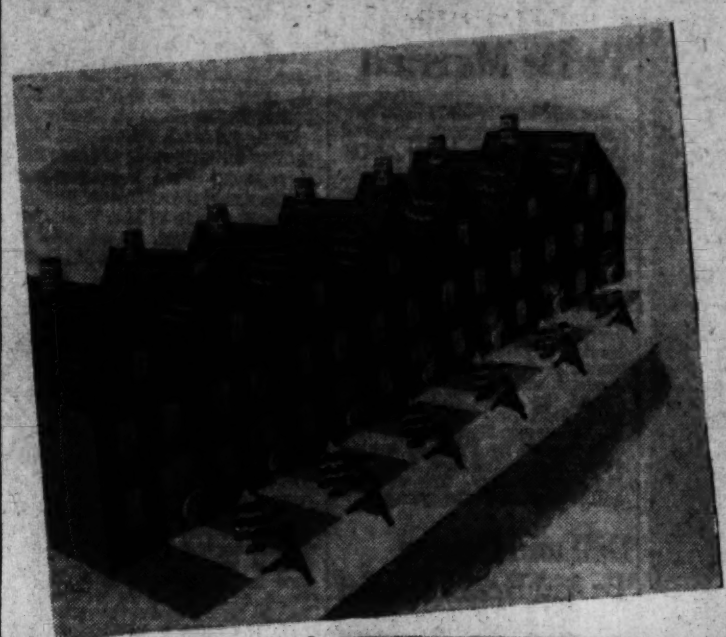

Not more than one-fourth of the people in our country are on good diets. The rest are malnourished. You may think of malnutrition as the result of not getting enough food. But malnutrition does not necessarily mean a lack of food. It may result from a poor choice of food. It is easy to get too much to eat and still not get enough of the dietary essentials. On a good diet you allot many more calories to the protective foods: dairy products, fruits and vegetables, whole grains, meat and eggs.

Inexpensive Diets

Your instant reaction may be that you cannot afford such an abundant diet. But there are inexpensive as well as expensive sources of the protective elements and with a practical knowledge of nutrition you can give your family the menus that will increase their chances in this highly competitive world.

Tomorrow—Low-cost vitamins.

Current U. S. Life Shown in Greeting Cards

Modern in feeling, the card above, designed by Jack Kabat (Designers and Illustrators Group) depicts a 1941 Christmas for apartment dwellers. Note the city slickers with their streamlined, tiny trees

Native Customs, Art, Featured in Yule Messages

By Genevieve Reynolds

FIFTY YEARS hence—if the small son of the house asks, "What was Christmas like in 1941?" grandpa can bring out his card album and show the little fellow. For the season's greetings of 1941 depict contemporary American life.

"People of that year," grandpa will explain as he opens his collection, "were worried about World War II. They were afraid Hitler might win and abolish Christmas. Therefore, the artists strove to preserve and interpret strictly American life on Christmas cards."

"It was then," he will point out, "that the American Artist Group (celebrating its seventh year) introduced two innovations in their large assortment of Christmas cards. To encourage the growing appreciation of native sculpture the group presented for the first time three dimensional reproductions of the works of famous American sculptors.

Portraits Bailed

"See this Madonna and Child," says grandpa, showing a card on which raised in heavy, silver metallic paper on a dark blue background is a copy from the sculpture of Robert Laurent. "And this pale green metallic card with a white boy riding bareback a graceful fawn—well that's 'Leaping Joy,' reproduced from Joseph Nicolosi's sculpture by that name."

"What was the other innovation?" inquired the tiny tot.

"Wait, I'll show you," says

The boys may be in the Army now but that doesn't keep them from playing Santa Claus. At least that's Barney Tobey's idea, who designed the above Christmas greeting. This humorous twist to American life also is the typical, old-fashioned, sentimental one

What to Do With Those Old Mementoes

Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

WE'VE collected menus for years... in Europe, Russia and the Orient as well as in America. But most of them have been stuck away in a package in the family storeroom. The other day a friend who is fixing up a basement game room mentioned that she was planning on having a panel of menus pasted up over the refreshment bar. That inspired us to dig ours out—with the generous intention of giving most of them to her. But sorting through them brought back so many memories that we couldn't bear to part with many of them.

So we got to figuring out ways of keeping or using such keepsakes. For like lots of other such mementoes, they're not much good if they are kept tied in a bundle and hidden away in attic or cellar.

They could be kept in a scrapbook, where they can be thumbed through easily—what a novel gift that would be for someone specially interested in the subject. Or they could be made into mats for framed pictures collected on those same trips... or for enlarged snapshots.

A small study, game room, hall or kitchen could be papered with menus, match folders, maps, old clippings, hotel labels or college stickers, old prints, movie or circus posters, or whatever else you have been hoarding vaguely. Or just one wall of these would be amusing.

Boxes are useful things—if you save them, cover them with interestingly tender love for Josephine, seven years his senior—which no amount of infidelity and subservience to political expediency ever really destroyed, since her name was on his lips as he breathed his last, in exile long apart from her. And there is the immortal true love story of Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning—again a case in which the lady was approximately seven years her husband's senior. Of a less romantic but historically comparable kind was the profoundly companionable marriage made by Diarrell with a woman ten years his senior.

One might argue that these are irrelevant examples, inasmuch as the principal characters were exceptional persons. But it is reasonable to think that they became great in social stature in proportion as they dared to "be themselves," to live by their intrinsic sense of the fitness of things, rather than in meek conformity to the mass-mind thought of their day; and, in particular, to follow their hearts in the quest for happiness, which is found in the realm of affectional relationships, or not at all.

And I should guess that their independence of thought and action, in the field of sentimental fellowship, has been duplicated times without number, through the ages, by unheralded and unnamed "average citizens"—and would suggest that your daughter probably has joined a vaster company than either of you knows, in adopting an attitude of unconcern toward

Is Mother Warranted in Worrying About Divorcee Daughter's Romance With Man 10 Years Younger? She Finds All Her Friends 'Giddy and Immature'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am very much concerned about my daughter, a divorcee aged 35, who is spending most of her leisure time in company of a young man ten years her junior. It seems to me she is wasting valuable time on this boy—time that should be invested in cultivating the interest of men of more suitable age. However, from things she has said, I gather she thinks she would not care to marry again, and hence isn't concerned about his age.

I believe she has been spending weekends with this boy, but I am not in a position to prove this, without offending her. I have tried to bring up the subject for discussion, but the coldness of her manner prevents me from speaking directly. I do not want to provoke a quarrel, as she is self-supporting and might leave home if angered.

Many of her present-day friends seem to me to be giddy and immature. Does this difference of opinion concerning her friends stem from the fact that we belong to different generations? Or do you agree with me that my daughter is foolish in giving all her time to a man so much younger than herself?

W. N. F.

Time for Parental Interference Is Past

DEAR W. N. F.: I believe it is true that the majority of modern-day adults on the sunny side of 40 or even 50, who have had some cosmopolitan social seasoning, have ceased to share the conviction generally held by conventionally-minded persons of the pre-First World War generation, that a man who is younger than a woman is thereby automatically disqualified to be taken seriously (by her or anyone else) as (shall we say?) her sentimental friend.

Men and women alike tend nowadays to choose their friends of the opposite sex with greater reference to intellectual or temperamental compatibility than to date of birth. And in the literary and artistic professions, where independence of personality-expression has become rather a commonplace phenomenon, in this twentieth century, for men to love, court and marry women who are their seniors in age by as much as ten years. If it were tactful to publicize a lady's age—and we know it isn't—one might cite here, offhand, various instances to support the statement; instances in which notable career women have married younger men, and (so far as the public knows) have had no reason to regret their choice.

This trend is not confined to persons in the spotlight. In virtually everybody's list of relatives or acquaintances there can be found one or more cases of romance or marriage flourishing between a woman and a man who is several years her junior. And while this may be a comparatively recent development in the American scene, it has had glamorous as well as dignified precedent in older national societies than ours.

There was Napoleon Bonaparte's incomparably ardent and indestructibly tender love for Josephine, seven years his senior—which no amount of infidelity and subservience to political expediency ever really destroyed, since her name was on his lips as he breathed his last, in exile long apart from her. And there is the immortal true love story of Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning—again a case in which the lady was approximately seven years her husband's senior. Of a less romantic but historically comparable kind was the profoundly companionable marriage made by Diarrell with a woman ten years his senior.

One might argue that these are irrelevant examples, inasmuch as the principal characters were exceptional persons. But it is reasonable to think that they became great in social stature in proportion as they dared to "be themselves," to live by their intrinsic sense of the fitness of things, rather than in meek conformity to the mass-mind thought of their day; and, in particular, to follow their hearts in the quest for happiness, which is found in the realm of affectional relationships, or not at all.

And I should guess that their independence of thought and action, in the field of sentimental fellowship, has been duplicated times without number, through the ages, by unheralded and unnamed "average citizens"—and would suggest that your daughter probably has joined a vaster company than either of you knows, in adopting an attitude of unconcern toward her current best beau's "calendar age."

All this is not to say, however, that she is making a wise choice of exclusive companion, in the present instance. It is only to say that one cannot justifiably dismiss the man as "no fit friend" for her merely because he happens to be ten years her junior. Whether he is a fit friend for her could only be decided with reference to (a) his character-quality, and (b) the nature of his influence upon her philosophy and conduct. But since she is 35 years old and a divorcee—which is to say, an adult with experiential knowledge of the so-called "facts of life"—I am of the opinion that it will be comes and ill behooves you, her mother, to be trying to dictate her choice of friends for her. The time for "parental manipulation" of her life and affairs is long since past, and I think you may as well adjust (or resign) yourself to that fact.

Actress Urges All Women Give Hands Good Care

Hollywood, Calif.—Olivia de Havilland, who portrays a lady of the Civil War era in a current picture, maintains that in the twentieth century "exquisitely groomed hands should be the common possession of all womankind."

In other days, only the gentlewoman had the time or the inclination to take good care of her hands but today's lady fair is very hand-conscious, be she housewife, office girl or actress.

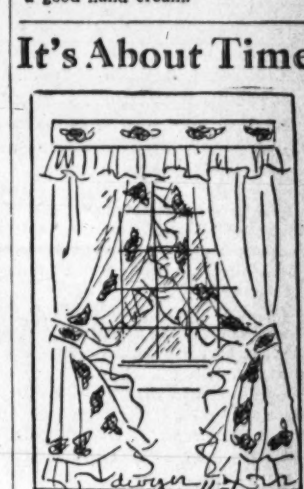

In addition to the daily care of manicures, oil treatments, etc., Olivia and all the girls on the screen give to hands in the way she expresses my own sentiments about the importance of having expressive hands as well said Lard Perc Westmore, makeup director.

Hands should be expressive both in repose and in movement. They'll be neither if there are lumps where softly-rounded knuckles should be, if the skin around the nails is hard and dark, or if the tips of the fingers are blunt when they should taper to refined points.

If you've studied piano, you'll remember that your teacher taught you to stretch the areas between the fingers of each hand with the fingers of the other hand. You also curled your hands into tight fists, then let the fingers fly open, straining to pull away from one another. All of these exercises, meant for "reaching octaves," were helping you to hand beauty. It's my advice, followed by Miss de Havilland and others, to practice these two exercises daily, according to Westmore.

And for massaging knobby fingers into slender tips, use the "putting on gloves" exercise with a good hand cream.

Byron Foy to Be Brazilian Embassy Guests After Visiting in Virginia Hunt Country

Party Patter: Coming to Washington this week for a visit at the Brazilian Embassy are Mr. and Mrs. Byron Foy (Thelma Chrysler), of New York. The Foyes have been in the Virginia hunt country for several days as guests of Walter Chrysler, jr., at North Wales, near Warrenton. Their daughter is attending Foxcroft School.

The Brazilian Ambassador and Mme. Martins are planning two dinners in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Foy—the first one on Thursday, the second, on the following evening.

Chief Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone will give dinners Wednesday and Thursday evenings next week. . . . The Netherlands Minister and Mme. Loudon will gather in a few friends for a similar party on Wednesday evening, December 3. . . . On Thursday of this week, Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin will be hosts at a dinner at the Alibi Club. . . . And a New Year's Eve dance is already on the calendar for the debutante set. Former United States Ambassador to France and Mrs. Walter Evans Edge are planning it for their daughter, Camilla.

Masquerade Ball for Deb Set

Another very colorful holiday fete will gather in the deb set on December 22, when Col. and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley entertain at a masquerade ball in honor of their daughter, Ruth. "It's definitely to be a young people's party," said Mrs. Hurley. "Just debutantes, their friends and a very few from the younger married set."

Mention of the Hurleys reminds me—when the 17-year-old son in the family comes home for Christmas, you'd better not call him "Wilson" any more. Yes, I know that's been his name up to recently, and it's still used if you want the whole thing; but the boy has made up his mind, and very firmly, that he wants to be Pat, like his papa, and without consulting anybody about it, he simply started calling himself Pat—Patrick Wilson Hurley. He probably figured that just because a sister happened to arrive on the scene first and have the name Patricia handed over to her was no reason why he should forego being called by the same name as his father.

Luncheon time recently at the 1925 F Street Club found groups of America Firsters and interventionists sitting at tables jammed so close to each other nobody dared utter a word about "the war," the Administration's foreign policy, nor anything more significant than the turn of the weather.

Mrs. Hamilton Fish, Miss Janet Fish, Miss Margaret Frazer, one of the Pattens and the Misses Anne and Polly Randolph had a center table. In a nearby party were Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Wilson (she's the former Mrs. Rushmore Patterson, and as violent an interventionist as I know), London-correspondent Denys Smith, and one or two others, and also in the same section of the room were Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus McCormick and two or three guests. Mr. McCormick, who came here to work with Leon Henderson, and Mrs. McCormick have taken a house at 1408 Thirty-first Street for the winter.

'Mabel, Jr.' to Make Bow

A new name for "Little Mabel" turns up suddenly now that the young lady has grown up and is ready to be formally introduced to society by her famous mother, Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, former Assistant Attorney General. Though often known also as "Mabel Walker, jr.," invitations to her debut are being sent out in all solemnity with her real sobriquet, Dorothy Willebrandt.

The party will be a tea dance; the place—the Sulgrave Club; and the date has been set for Tuesday, December 23. Arriving shortly before that from her studies at Bucknell University will be the debutante, who is sure to be widely entertained during the holidays.

Wife to Attend Service Game For President

Mrs. Roosevelt, in lieu of the President, will attend the Army and Navy game in Philadelphia on Saturday. As is the usual custom she will sit first on the Army side, probably with the commandant of West Point, Maj. Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger, and the last half on the Navy side, with Admiral Russell Willson, superintendent of the Naval Academy.

Any number of box parties are being planned and heading the list of Navy hosts are the Secretary of Navy and Mrs. Frank Knox, The British Ambassador and Lady Halifax will be in their party as will be the Minister of Australia and Mrs. Richard G. Casey, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Stettinius, William S. Knudsen, Admiral Emory S. Land and Capt. and Mrs. Frank Beatty. Capt. Beatty is naval aide to the Secretary.

The Secretary of War and Mrs. Henry L. Stimson will also be hosts at a box party, but their lists of guests has not yet been settled. Others who will be hosts include the Undersecretary of the Navy and Mrs. James Forrestal, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Ralph A. Bard and the Chief of Naval Operations and Mrs. Harold Stark. Most of the parties will leave together on a special train and return aboard it after the game.

On Saturday the Secretary of Navy and Mrs. Knox attended the Princeton game as guests of the President of Princeton and Mrs. Harold Dodds. Also in the party were Admiral and Mrs. Stark, Admiral and Mrs. Chester W. Nimitz, the Undersecretary of the Navy and Mrs. Forrestal and a number of other high ranking naval officials.

A luncheon was given before the game at the Dodds home on the campus and later they were hosts at a tea for many of those attending the game.

Mrs. Ward to Give Dinner Party for Mrs. Van Rensselaer

Mrs. Peyton van Rensselaer, who is arriving here early today, will be the house guest of Mrs. Dorothy Lee Ward who will entertain at a dinner party in honor of Mrs. Van Rensselaer and Mrs. Ward's niece, Mrs. John Boyd Stanley.

Following the dinner party to-night additional guests will drop in, and Mrs. Ward will show movies of French-Indo-China, Siam, Bali, Dutch East Indies, Arabia, Suez Canal, and the Holy Land—many of which are in the war zone today.

Miss O'Donnell And Dr. Foote To Be Married

Mr. and Mrs. William J. O'Donnell announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary Jane, to Dr. William Dyer Foote, son of Mrs. Arthur McConville and the late Dr. John Foote.

Dr. Foote was graduated from Georgetown University in 1934 and Georgetown Medical School in 1939. He interned at Georgetown University Hospital and took further training at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, and at Columbia University, New York City.

At present Dr. Foote is serving a residency at the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary. The wedding will take place in the spring.

Ball and Bazaar To Aid British Relief

A bazaar and a ball this week in New York will fill the bill for Washingtonians who are willing to do some commuting in the cause of British relief. Viscountess Halifax, wife of the British Ambassador, will officiate at the opening of a three-day fair beginning Wednesday in the grand ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel.

She will also be guest of honor at an opening-day tea, for which Mrs. Thomas Hodge McGavack will be hostess. The Ambassador and Viscountess Halifax and Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Frank Knox head the patrons' list for the Navy ball Wednesday night in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. Many officials of this country and England are patrons. Funds for the war relief work of Bundles for Britain and the Navy League of the United States are the immediate object of the affair.

Mme. Grouitch Guest of Honor At Gay Party in Vogel Home

She said she "didn't know the party was especially" for her, but Mme. Grouitch, wife of the former Yugoslav Minister, definitely was the guest of honor at a late afternoon party given yesterday at Mrs. Martin Vogel's home on Woodland Drive.

Gayly informal, the fete got under way at 5:30 p. m. and was still holding forth a couple of hours later. Not one hostess but four moved through the throng to receive guests, and two hosts were also doing the honors of the afternoon. In other words, cards for the occasion went out in the name of Mrs. Vogel, her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Vogel, jr., the latter's mother, Mrs. Edingham Townsend, and Baron and Baroness Stackelberg.

Mrs. Vogel, wearing a floor-length gray crepe frock, with a garland of black roses on one shoulder, and Mrs. Townsend attired in a frock of pencil blue crepe, greeted the guests at the door of the drawing room. Holding court nearby was Mme. Grouitch, who wore over her royal purple frock, a scarlet jacket. Her old friends in the large company stood in line waiting for a chance to talk with her.

Baroness Stackelberg, who wore a becoming jade green jacket with a black skirt, spent most of the time in the reception hall. Mrs. Vogel, jr., gowned in a street-length frock, made the rounds from one room to another, stopping here and there to chat with her friends in the throng. Baron Stackelberg was here, there and everywhere, managing to see guests on their way out if not before.

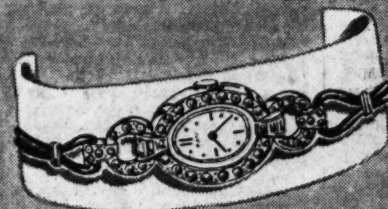

Seems Mme. Grouitch was well prepared for any queries about her coming calendar. She had given up the idea of taking a house here this season. She had a number of lectures scheduled, but no special "tour" engagements. She expected to be here until December 10, and then would go to New York to spend Christmas, proceeding from there to Buffalo for the New Year. "But after that, I have the most wonderful trip arranged," she said, and went on to elaborate. She was going to Texas to visit Capt. and Mrs. W. B. Shelley, at Fort Bliss, and might travel on from there to California. Back of plans for that visit to Texas there is quite a story—a story which had its beginning for Mme. Grouitch back in the days of World War I. She and Miss Elizabeth Shelley became interested in a small Serbian boy and arranged to have him brought to this country. He was reared and educated here, and is now Capt. Shelley, U. S. A., stationed at Fort Bliss.

"Looks as if everybody in Washington is here," said the Portuguese Minister, surveying the throng. Mme. Bianchi agreed with her envoy husband and so did several others who were clustered round about Mme. Grouitch came in and made the rounds quickly, reminding all her friends, in passing, of the forthcoming Yugoslav bazaar. William Elmie and Mr. and Mrs. Neville Godwin of the British Embassy were there; also Capt. and Mrs. Karl Wessel, Miss Carolyn Nash and George Abell with Mme. Van Houten.

Maj. Gen. Allen Gullion chatted with pretty Miss Anne Harcourt. Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Holdrege were among those present; also, Mrs. Ollie James, Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Hatch, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz and Mr. and Mrs. Valentine Williams. The former French premier, Camille Chautemps and Mme. Chautemps were early arrivals. Among those coming along a bit later were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Holland Duell, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Moulton, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Adams, Mr. and Mrs. George Renchard, Miss Dorothea Villard, Mrs. William T. Mann, Miss Betty Beall, and several dozen others.

Chinese Children To Greet First Lady At Oriental Fete

Mme. Alfred See, with six little Chinese children, all in their native dress, will be at the door of Hillendale, Mrs. Anne Archbold's home at 3905 Reservoir Road, to welcome Mrs. Roosevelt when she arrives to open the Chinese fete this afternoon at 2:30.

Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the fete, and members of her committee will receive distinguished guests with the hostess, Mrs. Archbold. And in order that guests may find their way about easily, Mrs. Carr has selected a group of prominent women who will serve as hostesses during the afternoon.

Mme. Yu, wife of the Second Secretary of the Chinese Embassy; Mme. Deson See, Mme. S. M. Chu, wife of the Military Attache; Mme. C. G. Wy, Mme. T. M. Liang, and Mme. S. J. Hsiao will be in charge of the table, assisted by other Chinese ladies.

Mrs. James Blaine Walker, jr., of New York, executive secretary of the women's division for China Relief, arrived in town Saturday, bringing with her a beautiful collection of Chinese jewelry, given by the women of China to Mme. Chiang Kai-shek. These are to be sold for the benefit of her "warphans" as the great Chinese leader calls her little war orphans. Tickets for the fete, proceeds from which will be turned over to the fund being raised in the United States for the Chinese Industrial Cooperatives, may be purchased at Mrs. Archbold's sale this afternoon.

Barrys Plan Dance For Daughter Frances

A small holiday dance for the younger young set is being planned for December 23 by Maj. and Mrs. David S. Barry for their daughter, Frances, who is now at Holmquist School, in New Hope, Pa.

On the invitation list are her girl friends here and boys from prep schools and colleges who will be in town for Christmas vacation. The dance will be at the 1925 F Street Club.

Swedish Actress Feted After Her Performance

The problem of whom to invite from the diplomatic corps and whom not to include was one Mme. Bostrom, wife of the Swedish Minister, did not try to solve when she made out her guest list for last night's party. Arriving at the Swedish Legation after the opening performance of "Golden Wings" at the National Theater were many well-known Washingtonians, but the only diplomats invited were members of the legation staff.

Guest of honor for the event was the attractive Swedish actress, Signe Hasso, who has the starring role in the current play, and who had a throng of admirers around her from the moment she arrived at the Swedish Legation.

Receiving informally, the Swedish Minister and Mme. Bostrom greeted their guests wherever they happened to be, but during the earlier part of the event, the host and hostess stood near the door of the drawing room.

A number of those in the company had met the lovely actress before, as she has come to the Capital for occasional, fleeting visits several times since she arrived in this country more than a year ago.

Legation Staff There Full Force

Mme. Bostrom, attired in pale mauve chiffon, was generally assisted by several members of the legation staff. Mme. Wennerberg, wife of the Swedish counselor, seemed to know everybody present and busied herself with seeing that all guests met everybody else. She wore a black frock with silver accents, and moved from group to group, lingering here and there to talk with her close friends, Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, Dr. Robert Oden, Mrs. Gifford Pinchot and many others.

Tor Hugo Wistrand, new Counselor at the legation, and Mme. Wistrand moved through the crowd, chatting with friends here and there. Capt. Karl Wessel, Military Attache, complimented Miss Hasso on her performance for the evening, and the two took "time out" to reminisce on some of their experiences in traveling across Asia and the Orient, en route to America, at the same time.

Mme. Wessel, smartly turned out in a frock of rose faille with a wide band of sky blue satin on the skirt to match her gloves and turban, came in with her husband and Miss Carolyn Nash and George Abell. The Swedish First Secretary and Mme. Dahlman showed Mr. and Mrs. Russell Sard and Mrs. Leland Harrison the way to the buffet table, which was a popular center of attention during the latter part of the evening.

Notes Painter Shares Spotlight

Miss Hasso, who arrived at the party shortly before midnight, shared the spotlight with the noted Swedish painter, Einar Nerman, and his wife, who were down from New York especially for the occasion. No sooner were they "discovered" by a group of art-loving guests than they were completely surrounded for the remainder of the party.

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon was among those enjoying the pleasant event; also Sir Wilmott and Lady Lewis, Griffith Warfield, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mrs. Marion Warburg and Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell.

Still others there were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Krock, who will give a party for Miss Hasso later in the week; Mr. and Mrs. Hallett Johnson, Mrs. Jasper DeLoe, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mr. and Mrs. Barnet Nover and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Waldrop.

Being welcomed back by friends were the former Polish Counselor and Mme. Witold Wankowicz, who have been in New York for the past two years. Recently returned, they have taken a house in Virginia for the season. Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Morgan were among others enjoying the pleasant party; and still others there included Miss Elsie Ekengren, Count Biondi, Otis Wingo and a number of others.

Members of the Legation staff present, in addition to those already mentioned, included Counselor Folke Wennerberg, Attache and Mme. Hichens Bergstrom, and Assistant Attache and Mme. Wennberg.

Representative and Mrs. Charles Dewey will have Mrs. Clive Runnells, of Chicago, as their guest this weekend.

Col. and Mrs. Milton Grafley, of Crossed Sabres, Wayne, Pa., will entertain Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Conger Pratt of Washington, in their box at the opening performance of the Metropolitan Opera in New York this evening. Gen. Pratt is commanding officer of the Third Army Corps Area. Col. Baker is superintendent of the Valley Forge Military Academy.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Snowden Hill, who are still being widely entertained, were the guests in whose honor Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem entertained at dinner last evening at their home on Thirty-fourth Place. Covers were laid for 12. Mrs. Meem and Mr. Hill are cousins.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Foote will be hosts at another in their series of small informal cocktail parties Tuesday, December 2, at their home at 2117 Leroy Place. Invitations are for "after 5."

Mrs. Daniel C. Roper will entertain at luncheon Tuesday, December 2, at her home, 3901 Woodland Drive.

Candlelight Concert Wins High Praise

The setting might have been the great hall of some medieval baronial castle. Against the flickering candlelight the carved oak paneling of the walls gleamed somberly; massive carved chairs at the end of the room seemed dwarfed by the great fireplace they flanked. A fireplace large enough to roast on an ancient spit a whole wild boar as a feast for the company.

And before the great fireplace, also seeming dwarfed by comparison, yesterday afternoon a string quartet, their music lighted by candleabra, played for an hour music that echoed softly through the great hall and the lower rooms of the house. It was hard to realize upon stepping in through the front door that this was the Phillips' Memorial Gallery and that busy, bustling Washington was just outside. It seemed more like stepping into the heart of an ancient tapestry or into King Arthur's Court.

It was much easier to realize that this was the opening concert of the eighth season of the Washington Chamber Music Society; and to understand why the subscribers demanded the concert series year after year as a momentary breathing spell and respite from the cares of a troubled world.

At yesterday's candlelight concert the Pro Musica String Quartet gave a program of selections by Dmitri, Scriabin, and Johannes Brahms. Many a well-known Washington "name" could be found in the attentive audience. Included among those noted were Mrs. Grouitch, Mrs. Breckenridge Bayne, Mrs. George T. Pettengill, Mrs. Henry S. Villard, Wilbur Carr, Boris Shushkin, Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, Mrs. William H. Davis, Baroness von Boettel, Mme. Loudon, Mrs. Jouett Shore, Mrs. John Sternhagen, Mrs. Walter Lippmann, Mrs. David Barry, Mrs. Barnet Nover, Mrs. Robert Sherrod, Mrs. Douglas Hatch, Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mrs. Adlai Stevenson and many more. Ushering the guests to their places were Miss Joan Dodd, Miss Patricia Prochnik and Miss Ruth Hurley.

Society Sees Opening of Play About R. A. F.

A glittering array of celebrities turned out last night at the National for the opening performance of "Golden Wings"—a tale of the R. A. F. in action. A number of Swedish diplomats were on hand to applaud their young countrywoman, Signe Hasso, who starred in the performance.

A number of military attaches—some arrayed in uniforms vieing with the blue and gray of the R. A. F.—were there last night. The Minister of Sweden and Mme. Bostrom attended from the legation as did the Military Attache and Mme. Wessel. Mme. Bostrom was attired in a mauve chiffon frock. Thrown over her pale crepe gown, Mme. Wessel wore a short mink cape.

Chatting animatedly with a group during intermission was Miss Carolyn Nash who wore a black and white dinner gown edged in silver beading. Also in the group were Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, the latter wearing London-dyed squirrel over her gold dinner gown. Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, accompanied by a friend, was glimpsed in the throng. Talking with Mannix Walker and Russell Sard were Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja. Pretty brunette Betty Stewart-Richardson wore a blue fox jacket over her bright gown.

Just back from Canada, where they have been spending the past few months, were Mr. and Mrs. James M. E. O'Grady. The former Miss Nancy Hoskinson wore a gold coat over her dinner frock. Sir Wilmott and Lady Lewis were in the throng. She was strikingly gowned in a gray crepe ensemble the bodice completely studded with sparkling rhinestones. Valentine Williams, now on duty with the British Embassy, was there as Mrs. Irene Caldwell, Miss Meredith Howard and George Abell.

The Military Attache of the Cuban Embassy and Senora de Munilla were accompanied by their son, Lieut. Col. Oscar Moscoso, Military Attache of Bolivia, was on hand, as were the Military Attache of China and Mme. Chu, the Air Attache of Peru, Capt. Enrique Nabarthe, and Air Commodore of the British Embassy and Mrs. H. N. Thornton.

AMERICA

Preparing for another energetic day!...

"The bedding industry is now, and has been for some time, engaged in producing sleep equipment for the increasing needs of national defense. It is also energetically endeavoring to meet the public demand for its products. In this task, the industry is firmly resolved to let no inferiority break faith with its public. Selection of products may be limited, but quality will be maintained."

★ Encouraged by the advancements of the sleep equipment industry, America has acquired the habit of sleeping better than any other people. It is a habit not to be discouraged — because it is this improved, energy-giving sleep that fortifies America for the pressing tasks of the day.

Nature has made it compulsory for us to sleep—to restore the bodily energies. To get more of this energy is one of today's most urgent needs. In democracy's race with time, it is that extra energy, that surplus of vitality, which we must have to speed up production. And America has learned that the way to greater energy lies in the improvement of its sleep.

Agriculture Faces Big Cut

Deep cuts in the billion-dollar Agriculture Department appropriation are reported to be imminent. It's no secret that the Budget Bureau has been studying the 1942 Agriculture appropriation with an eye to recapturing some of the money approved by Congress. The Budget Bureau report, after the President's approval, is expected at the department this week. It's rumored that it will call for a slash of approximately $250,000,000 which of course will mean dismissing some employees.

Federal Bureau of Investigation is hiring clerical employees, stenographers, typists and under clerks. Applicants will be tested and interviewed before being hired. Stenographers must be able to take dictation at 120 words, and 45 words a minute is required of typists. Under clerk applicants must be between 18 and 35. Some male under clerks will be trained to do fingerprint work. None of the jobs is under Civil Service. Apply at room 2344 in the Justice Building if you are interested.

Fred Wallace has been appointed assistant to Agriculture Secretary Wickard. He's from Nebraska. . . . Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, is reported to have the inside track for appointment as alien property custodian if and when the office is created. . . . President Roosevelt has exempted from civil service all jobs in the Panama Canal Zone. Meanwhile, the Panama Canal office here is recruiting engineers for duty in the zone. Canal employees are given 61 days annual leave which is more than any other class of Federal workers.

Pay Raise Delayed

It's now predicted that the 60,000 Federal employees here won't get pay raises guaranteed them under the Rasmussen-Mead Act, until January 1. House Appropriations Committee is still holding hearings on the deficiency bill which will contain the money for the promotions. The bill won't be reported out of committee until next week. But ease your minds, the pay raises will have to be made as of October 1 and the 60,000 will be paid in supplemental checks.

Relations between Attorney General Biddle and his trust-buster, Thurman Arnold, are reported to have gone from bad to worse. There's no love lost between the two officials. Rumors recur that Arnold will resign but they are just rumors. . . . civil service tests: assistant soil scientist, $2600; assistant civil nurse, $2000, for duty at St. Elizabeth's; student dietitian, $420 a year. . . . OEM employees tonight will gather at the Calvary Baptist Church, Eighth and H Streets Northwest for an evening of group singing.

Louell J. Chawner, principal economist of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, has been appointed special assistant to Commerce Secretary Jesse Jones. He will direct the research activities of the several bureaus within the department. Conferences among the department's various research experts will be held frequently and private business men will be invited to participate.

The general shortage of machine operators has forced Federal agencies to train people for the jobs. The Office of the Quartermaster General, War Department, is training from 30 to 35 messengers to operate mimeograph machines. The Commerce Department took 15 persons from the civil service messenger register and is training them to be multilingual operators. Up until recently, the Social Security Board in Baltimore had to train its tabulating machine operators. The board plans to continue the training and it's on the lookout for a person to head up a training section.

The office of the Adjutant General, War Department, is training its own tabulating machine operators. Alien Registration needs 75 tabulating operators and few if any are available. The answer is to train them. Winston B. Stephens is chief of the civil service training division and he assists departments in training employees. Training on the job, many believe, is in its infancy. Civil Service Commission has suggested to departments that stenographers and typists be trained on the job before they are assigned to regular work.

Six Leaders Tackle D.C. Problems

Experts Offer Solutions in Their Fields at Board Of Trade Meeting

Speaking on a "Washington of Tomorrow" program at the Board of Trade's monthly meeting, six leading citizens of the District last night presented their solutions of the city's increasing municipal problems, occasioned by its mushrooming population.

Speakers were Police Chief Maj. Edward J. Kelly; John Nolan, Jr., director of planning of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District Highway director; Lawrence E. Williams, chairman of the District Defense Housing Commission; Maj. J. B. Gordon, director of the Sanitary Engineering Commission, and E. D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co.

They were introduced by Fred A. Smith, president of the Board of Trade, who told the more than 1000 attending members at the Willard Hotel that "the Federal Government employs now more than 200,000 persons in the District, and is adding to this number at the rate of roughly 1000 per week."

Whitehurst Urges Speed

Thus, tonight, we have selected a number of the men who are directly performing some portion of the major operation which is being made on the face of our city, to come here and briefly outline what their plans are, and what they think is going to be necessary," President Smith said.

Capt. Whitehurst, speaking on the traffic problem, stated that "in the past, we have not been bold enough to face a serious situation, but we must work together now with all possible speed."

He emphasized the importance of four particular projects, adding that he felt sure priority authorizations and appropriations would hasten their completion.

He named as the projects, the following: Grade separation structures at Fourteenth Street and Maine Avenue; the South Capitol Street Bridge; an elevated highway on K Street including connections to Key Bridge and highways to the northwest, and the extension of Independence Avenue west of Fourteenth Street.

Nolan discussed the plan to build the Board of Trade members that the Planning Commission had proposed a spreading out of the Government office space along the axis of the Mall, extended along East Capitol Street, covering 4 miles from the Potomac to the Anacostia River.

He declared that much could be done to obtain a better distribution of Federal buildings in the limited area of the city, "commensurate with the increased size of the community as a whole."

Speaking on housing problems was Lawrence Williams, who called for the immediate construction of hundreds of "temporary demountable houses."

"The answer to our housing problem," he said, "is not restrictions nor dormitories, but low-cost housing facilities for family groups, and that as soon as is physically possible."

Gordon discussed the District's sanitary problems, declared that "unless we are to curtail the use of water to consumers, additional filter capacity is essential immediately."

The sanitation director said that his organization hopes to obtain $370,000 from the PWA in order to provide an additional 25 million gallons per day filter capacity.

"However, there is no possibility of an insufficient supply of water," he added. "The Potomac River is at our disposal."

E. D. Merrill, transit company president, described effect of the city's increased population on his company, and revealed that 29 per cent more vehicles have been added to the transit system.

More Police Still Needed

Maj. Kelly, the sixth speaker, declared that although 100 officers were being added to the police force, "We can still use probably 200 more."

He said that the force was undergoing a complete reorganization and that "no drones or dead wood will be tolerated."

Through our traffic school, our police academy and with other needed changes, we will do everything possible to make our police force the Nation's best," he stated.

Earlier in the evening, Wilmer J. Waller, chairman of the 1942 campaign committee of the Greater National Capital Committee, was presented a certificate of merit by Edgar Morris.

Housing Unit Urged to Act In Bombings

As another link in the civilian protective services of Washington, Col. Lemuel Bolles, executive director of defense, yesterday asked prompt establishment of an emergency housing organization.

"It is not intended that this plan at this time contemplate evacuation on a large scale to distant localities," Col. Bolles said.

Supervision of the housing arrangement would be by the deputy warden in each of the city's 60 defense areas and that "no hard and fast rule should be attempted."

A survey of each community should be made, he said, to determine facilities for providing an assembly center where "the homeless can be gathered, formed into groups of 10, 25, etc., and guided to localities where temporary shelter is available."

A simple and fast system of registration and a chain of escorts for groups of shelterless people should be considered, he said.

The first air raid precautions classes of the American Women's Voluntary Services in the District began yesterday at 1940 Connecticut Avenue, with both the afternoon and evening classes turning pupils away, Mrs. Donald E. Church and Mrs. Leonard C. Urquhart, who have had training in New York City, were the teachers.

Classes will continue for four weeks, twice weekly. Bombs, gas masks, shelters will be studied. The magnesium bomb will come in for most attention, Mrs. Urquhart said.

Out of the classes, it is hoped by A. W. V. S., will come a trained corps of women "who can assist in civilian defense instruction and operate as a unit during an emergency."

John Wyker, 53, a resident of the Soldiers' Home here, was telling his cronies with pride in his self-effacing way yesterday of "my life's high point."

This was when he had gone on his crutches to the art exhibition at the Departmental Auditorium on Saturday, gripping one of his own paintings in his hand. He had passed from one to the other of the nearly 1800 good and faulty paintings.

Although he had never studied art or hobnobbed with its people, he sought out the exhibition's director, Holger Cahill, to say that he had looked around and had seen some things "appearing to be in my class."

He knew he had come too late, but his hand unloosed its grip on the crutch rung to show Cahill his watercolor of the Francis Scott Key Bridge.

"A feeling for color," "Interesting," "Poetry of emotion."

All manner of things were seen in the painting and much in Wyker, who had joined the Army in 1904, had traveled the world and painted for no reason other than that he wanted to.

Officials relaxed the rules and admitted his picture to the show. Then the girls of the King-Smith Studio-School, who have been helping in sale of the exhibition entries, bought the picture and offered it to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who accepted it.

Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone of the United States Supreme Court saw it at the exhibition where it was still hung, and said he would like to meet Wyker. When he was introduced to the old soldier, the Chief Justice said he liked "the spirit" in the painting and the spirit of Wyker. Of this Wyker said: "That's everything is my life's high point."

Lusak, Podnos Show Promise As Candlelight Concerts Open

Washington Chamber Music Society presents the Pro-Musica String Quartet (Owen Lusak, Jeno Sevely, Theodor Podnos and William Brennand) in Phillips Memorial Gallery on Monday afternoon. Program: Quartet in A minor (Brahms); Quartet in A minor (Brahms).

Beginning the season's series of Candlelight Concerts amid the treasures of the Phillips Memorial Gallery, the Washington Chamber Music Society met yesterday afternoon to enjoy with their guests a program by the four-piece Pro-Musica String Quartet.

Two changes in the personnel of the quartet placed Owen Lusak at the first desk and Theodor Podnos at the viola player, and the new combination promises to do well in the matter of tone-blending. There was a good balance among the instruments, and the intonation had savviness.

The hour's program brought together a novelty, a recent quartet by Dmitri Shostakovich receiving its first local performance, and the A minor quartet of Brahms. In the Shostakovich work one was immediately struck by the tendency toward romanticism which this rebellious composer also manifested in his fifth symphony. The new work keeps close to tonality, for one thing, and actually ends in the unmistakable chord of C major. But it is in the content of the music that a vein of unshamed poetry reveals a more personal expression.

Quartet Pleasant

As an example of confusing markers, Delano cited large "do not enter" signs on certain streets.

"An out-of-town driver," he said, "comes to a sudden halt when he sees the sign, and then on closer examination reads in smaller type 'Between 4 and 6:30 p. m.'"

He also had a few bitter remarks about motorists "who weave all over the streets" and pointed particularly to buses which pass one another during rush hours.

At the conclusion of his talk, Delano left the suggestion with city officials that they study a one-way street system similar to the plan in New York City.

Delano was introduced by Chairman P. Y. K. Howatt. Other guests at the luncheon included Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kuta, John Nolan, Jr., director of planning for the Park Commission; Thomas Settle, executive secretary, and Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways.

Rent Bill Action Due Thursday

Senate Concurrence In House-Amended District Measure Is Expected

Senate concurrence in the House-amended District rent control bill is expected Thursday when the measure will be reintroduced with a statement of the amendment's aims by Senator Burton (Republican), of Ohio, a member of the District Committee.

The amendment would vest a rent administrator with greater discretionary powers in determining fair rent levels. It represents a compromise agreement between District Committee backers and Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, after the Senate had stricken a previous amendment proposed by the Texas Congressman.

Action on the measure was deferred yesterday by the Senate at the suggestion of Minority Leader McNary, who questioned the purpose of the amendment to the bill freezing rent rates at the January 1, 1941, level. Senator Burton will explain the purpose of the amendment in the absence of Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee.

The House yesterday passed a bill giving the District health officer authority to condemn unwholesome food. Chairman Randolph of the District Committee pointed out that the health officer held the authority prior to enactment of the Federal Food and Drug Act.

Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, suggested that the District Committee report out legislation regulating sanitary conditions in Washington eating establishments.

"Terrible conditions have developed here in connection with bad food and the serving of food with unclean utensils," he declared. "I've personally seen coffee served in cracked cups, I've been told of beer glasses with rouse on the rims."

Chairman Randolph replied that the committee tomorrow will conduct a hearing on a proposal requiring local restaurant employees to submit to periodic blood tests. Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General, and Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, will testify before the committee.

Legislation requiring premarital blood tests in the District also will be considered by the committee tomorrow.

Municipal action on the District's pending rent control program after final Senate approval will await the return of Commissioner John Russell Young, now vacationing in Florida. It was reported at the District Building yesterday.

Commissioner Young Mason said nothing would be done officially toward selecting an administrator at least until after the bill is signed by the President.

The administrator's position will pay $7500 a year. Three names were mentioned last night as possible candidates for the job. They are Charles Jones, former real estate man and now with the Home Owners Loan Corporation; Robert F. Cogswell, local attorney, and E. Elmer Cummings, former Police Court clerk.

Mason said the city heads are faced with a housing problem in finding space for the new unit. It was suggested that the Unemployment Compensation Board might be moved from the old Ford Building on lower Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest to make room for the rent control group.

Howard University School of Music presents Bernardo Segall in a piano recital on Monday night in Andrew Raskin Memorial Chapel. Program of compositions by Bach, Skryabin, Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy, Liszt, Rakhmaninov, Stravinsky and Albeniz.

Bernardo Segall, who has become a resident of Washington since his last recital appearance here, was finding technical form last evening when presented in the Howard University concert series. Because of a critic's divided duties, I missed the first part of his program which included three Busoni transcriptions of chorale preludes by Bach, Siloti's version of Bach's organ toccata and fugue in D major, Skryabin's fourth sonata and Beethoven's D major sonata, sometimes called "The Tempest."

My loss of some skillful and brilliant playing was evident in pianist's treatment of five études and "El Alcañal" from Albeniz' "Triana." For his unusual group of studies he chose Chopin's C sharp minor, Debussy's "Pour les huit doigts," Liszt's arrangement of Paganini's Caprice No. 17, Rakhmaninov's seldom-heard E flat minor and Stravinsky's F sharp major. These were played with clarity, crispness, verve and dynamic scintillation.

Mrs. Moore Here to Attend Chinese Fete

Mrs. Maurice T. Moore, chairman of the women's division of the Greater New York Committee of United China Relief, is in Washington to attend the Chinese fete to be given this afternoon at the home of Mrs. Anne Archbold, 3905 Reservoir Road, for the benefit of Chinese industrial cooperatives.

Mrs. Moore, a sister of Henry Luce, New York publisher, was born in China. China's valiant struggle for independence has so stirred her that she devotes her entire time working for United China Relief.

One of the important agencies of this organization is the Chinese industrial cooperatives. In an interview yesterday Mrs. Moore described the great contribution being made by "Indusco" in Chinese struggle.

"Chinese men, women and even children dismantled the coastal factories before the oncoming invading armies and transported the machinery on their backs thousands of miles into the interior of China. There, 'vest-pocket' industries were set up under the direction of the Chinese cooperatives. These tiny workshops, some of them hidden away in caves, are manufacturing basic necessities—blankets, candles, shoes, bandages, clothing, soap and medical supplies—for besieged China."

"The Industrial Cooperatives are a new economic development providing thousands of Chinese refugees with work and training in industrial skilled labor."

Mrs. Moore stated that in the two years since their founding some 3000 cooperative workshops have been set up throughout the interior of Free China, providing self-help work to more than 75,000 workers, many of them refugees from bombed Chinese cities.

Color Film Tells Story Of Cathedral

The story of the Washington Cathedral, as caught by a movie camera in sound and color, will be taken to anticipated audiences of one million Americans. It was said, following its premier presentation before 1000 persons at the Mayflower Hotel yesterday.

Requiring 25 minutes for a showing, the film opens with a dedication and greeting by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, and in ensuing sequences show the several altars, the intricate iron work and other works of art within the great edifice.

Throughout the film, a musical background is provided by the cathedral organ and the choir of men and boys under the direction of Paul Callaway, organist and choirmaster. There are flashes of pinnacles against colored skies and views of the cathedral's stained windows.

A. G. Stoughton, executive secretary of the Cathedral, directed the filming and provided the film voice.

Carr went to Leesburg and brought back Deputy Sheriff D. H. Cooley. On entering the mansion they found it in wild disarrangement. Bloodstains spotted the floors and walls, furniture was overturned. In the closet where the body lay, however, the china rested unmoved on the shelves.

Loveless was fully clothed, including his overcoat. He had been shot in the back by three bullets, and a fourth was lodged in the wall of the breakfast room. These bullets, examination later revealed, were shot from two different caliber guns. Loveless' skull had been smashed in from the rear by a blunt weapon, believed to be a silver bowl, found dented and bloodstained on the hall stairs.

His Hat Found on Lawn

The attorney's hat was discovered on the lawn, and another man's hat, the initials in which were not divulged by investigators, was picked up in the house.

The lady's wrist watch, also bearing initials was found in the dining room, and the pair of cape-skin gloves was recovered from an unused fireplace.

Police last night were attempting to determine the ownership of the watch—whether it belonged to a

Loveless' body was found in large china closet (1), under staircase. Sideboard (2) was against closet door. Wires to the telephone (3) were cut. One chair was upset and others were out of place around the breakfast table (4). A woman's wrist-watch (X) was found nearby. The small table (5) was knocked out of place; candlesticks, a wooden bowl and a goblet were on the floor. A dented silver bowl and several blood stains were found near the foot of the staircase (6). Blood stained the door stoop (X). Deep scratches on the floor indicated that chair (7) in living room had been thrust aside. Chairs were also out of place in the dining room and blood stains were on the table (8). A pair of woman's black cape-skin gloves were found in the dining room fireplace (9). In the kitchen sink (10) were found three empty liquor glasses, three plates and three knives and forks neatly stacked. Everything in the kitchen appeared in order.

Daughters—Two of Loveless' three daughters are Mrs. Burrell Allen, jr. (left), and the former Evelyn Irene Loveless, now Mrs. Albert V. Carr, of Edgewood Arsenal, Md. They were pictured in June, 1937, when Mrs. Carr was graduated from Holton Arms Junior College here.

A native of Iuka, Miss., Loveless was born August 14, 1890. He was educated in the public schools of Limestone County, Ala., and attended an agricultural school at Athens, Ala. He took his law degree at National University Law School here, finishing in 1918. Before coming to Washington, Loveless spent three years teaching school and working in law offices in the South. He was a member of the Columbia Country Club here and the Barristers Lodge of the Masons.

Loveless was the father of three daughters, all of whom are married. They are Mrs. Albert V. Carr, Edgewood Arsenal, Md.; Mrs. Burrell Allen, jr., Seattle, Wash.; and Mrs. George F. Groff, Douglaston, N. Y.

member of the family and had been jarred to the floor from a depository during the death struggle, or whether it had dropped from the pocket of one of the intruders.

Three silver goblets were scattered over the floor of the breakfast room, and two candles had been knocked from their holders. In the kitchen sink were three plates, three knives and three forks, recently used. Cigarette butts were found all over the lower floor rooms, although Loveless was known to be a nonsmoker.

Contrary Clues

The three setups for dining gave the immediate implication that two friends of Loveless were involved, for Loveless lived alone at the manor with his wife, but she had been visiting a relative for the past week at Elkhorn, Ala.

But alongside these clues, were those of contrary nature found upstairs. Burnt matches and melted wax was found in one of the upstairs rooms, and the drawers of a bureau were opened, as if they had been ransacked. Was the intruder looking for valuables, or papers?

The mystery of Loveless' table guests was cleared up in Washington last night. It was learned at the Columbia Country Club, where he was a member, that Loveless had been there Sunday night with three guests, two women and a man. These were later identified by police officials as Lawrence Richey, secretary to President Herbert Hoover, Miss Nora Macon, 48, of 1028 Sixteenth Street Northwest, a Government employee, and Miss Mary Heath, of the Blackstone Hotel, Baltimore.

Left Club at 10:15 P. M.

Investigators were unable to contact Richey last night, but in questioning the two women they learned the following:

At about 5 p. m. they left for Washington, Loveless left a light on, "to scare burglars away," he told the two women. In the District they went to Richey's apartment, at 1801 Sixteenth Street Northwest, into Washington, picked up Miss Macon and Miss Heath at the former's apartment, drove them to the farm, where they had a picnic lunch and a few drinks and inspected the estate. He took particular pride in exhibiting his herd of 50 cattle and in feeding some of them.

Later they had lamb chop dinners at the Columbia Country Club, leaving about 10:15 p. m.

Women Didn't Smoke

The women said that Loveless was in their company until midnight, when he left them at Miss Macon's home. He then started out alone on the 45-mile drive back to his farm. Figuring an hour for the drive, officials placed the murder between 1 and 3 a. m.

Left unexplained by the women's testimony was the lipstick-stained cigarette. The women said they did not smoke. They said also that neither gloves nor watch belonged to them.

Miss Macon came to Metropolitan Police headquarters here last night to volunteer her information, and Miss Heath was reached by phone in Baltimore. Richey had gone to his country home in Catocin Hills, Md., and could not be reached. Police said that the four had known each other for many years.

Supporting the theory that burglars had slain Loveless was the fact that the telephone wires inside the house had been cut through. This, together with the placing of the heavy sideboard against the closet door containing the body, also indicated that Loveless might have been alive when jammed into the closet.

Although shot three times in the back, and struck a terrific blow on the head, the middle-aged lawyer put up a fierce struggle for his life. Associates said that despite his age, Loveless at 5 feet 11 inches and 195 pounds was a strong man and kept himself in fine physical condition.

Chalky Wright, Feather Champion, Suspended

N.B.A. Bans New Yorker For 'Runout'

President Greene Hits 'Chain-Store' Ownership of Title In Bringing Action

By the Associated Press
Paterson, N. J., Nov. 24.—Abe J. Greene, president of the National Boxing Association, announced today the suspension of Chalky Wright, recognized by the New York State Athletic Commission as featherweight champion.

The suspension was based on the failure of Wright to go through with an agreement to fight Bobby (Poison) Ivy at Hartford, Conn. The New York commission recently refused to suspend Wright.

In announcing the suspension, Greene took occasion to blast the so-called "chain store ownership" of boxing titles. The 126-pound title in particular frequently has been "handed down" to convenient opponents, he declared.

Wright Won Title Here

Wright, a veteran of 13 years in the ring, won the title in Washington by knocking out Joey Archibald in the eleventh round of a scheduled 15-round bout.

After gaining the crown, Wright last decision to Joe Perla, an obscure lightweight, in a non-title match in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. He followed by outpointing Leo Rodak last month in a slow and uninteresting ten-rounder in Washington.

The N. B. A. recognizes Jackie Wilson as featherweight champion. He beat Richard Lemps for the crown.

Bed Sheets, Posters Urge 'Goose Egg'

Once-Beaten Navy Eleven Favorite in Saturday Classic; Booth Rejoins Team

By the Associated Press
Annapolis, Nov. 24.—It was anything but blue Monday in Crabtown today.

Football fever gripped the Naval Academy's 3,110 midshipmen—the largest regiment in history—as Navy's jubilant gridders began preparations for the climax clash with Army's cadets Saturday before 98,000 fans in Philadelphia's Municipal Stadium.

Bancroft Hall, the midshipmen's dormitory, broke out with a rash of posters and painted bed sheets urging the sailor eleven not only to win the forty-second service classic but to limit the West Pointers to a "goose-egg" score.

Navy Favored

Navy, defeated only by mighty Notre Dame, is favored to register its third consecutive triumph over the Cadets, who tied Notre Dame and then lost to Harvard and Pennsylvania.

The midshipman regiment, pulling for a shutout victory, is more than willing to to's nickels instead of customary pennies at the statue of Tecumseh, the Indian chieftain diked out today in fresh war paint, for good luck when it marches past Saturday morning to entrain for Philadelphia.

The entire midshipman and cadet regiments, approximately 4000 strong, will parade Saturday before the kickoff, scheduled for 1:30 p. m., Eastern standard time. High ranking Army and Navy officials will witness the colorful set-to, ending both teams' season.

Boothe Is Back

Middle Head Coach Swede Larson and his operatives were jubilant today because Sammy Boothe, of Evanston, Wyo., regular right half-back whose shoulder injury kept him out of last Saturday's Princeton game, will be available Saturday.

Larson will not stage any live scrimmages this week because he doesn't want injuries to keep Navy from putting its full strength against Red Blak's charges.

Pictures of last year's Army-Navy contest which Navy won, 14-0, were viewed today before the gridders got a taste of West Point plays in dummy scrimmage. They also sharpened up their pass defense.

The squad leaves at 8:30 p. m. Thursday for the Manufacturers' Country Club, just outside Philadelphia, where it will be quartered. A practice session is slated Friday at Temple stadium.

Army Work Light

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 24 (AP)—Army's football team, preparing for its forty-second meeting with Navy at Philadelphia Saturday, underwent a light workout today involving little more than calisthenics and signal drill.

Although the Cadets emerged from their tussle with West Virginia without a serious injury, Coach Earl (Red) Blak has decided on a light-work schedule for the remainder of the week.

WASHINGTON, NOV. 25, 1941

This Morning

With Shirley Porich

"This ain't no may-pole dance, this is a tough racket. Furr should know that from all the punches he's caught." Thus bashed-nosed Fritzie Zivic dismissed with a snicker the reports that Phil Furr would go before the District Boxing Commission and insist that Zivic be nice when they meet in the Uline Arena ring tomorrow night.

Furr's camp has been beefing all week about Zivic's style of fighting. From the impression they are trying to get across, Philip is lovable and pure and Zivic is quite something else again. For instance, Fritzie is not above sticking a rigid thumb into a guy's eye, or letting a punch slip below the belt line, or sneaking a back-hand against the chin or banging away with the rabbit punch in the clinches. Zivic doesn't play nice, they say.

POVICH

Fritzie himself wasn't professing complete innocence yesterday as he dried out after his last heavy workout. "A guy's gotta protect himself, that's the big idea," he was saying. "I ain't as tough as people say. Trouble is they take a look at this dented nose of mine and think I'm a tough guy. I just look tough, mostly. 'Course, you know, we don't go in there to play the piano for ten rounds."

Furr's notion that Zivic is a rough playmate isn't exactly an idea exclusive with the Washington fighter. Fritzie's reputation as a cutie cluster has preceded him here, and Zivic confesses that he is no Fauntleroy inside the ropes. "How about my first fight with Henry Armstrong?" he asked. "Now there was a bout. We did everything, but bring mallets into the ring."

Referee Gives 'Em Green Light

"It got so in the late rounds with Armstrong that the rules went out the window. Henry was banging me with his elbows in close look at this cheek—and I couldn't stand that. I slowed him up with some slugs down below, and Referee Arthur Donovan finally gives up. He's separating us from one clinch and he says, 'okay you two guys if that's the way you want to fight, it's all right with me.' You should have seen those last rounds when Donovan gave us the green light. It was everybody for himself. That one was nice and rough."

"Armstrong gave me a tougher time than anybody I ever fought. You couldn't clinch with him, because he was always banging inside with his elbows, or something. But he's the nicest guy I ever fought. Ever since when those radio guys bring their microphones into the ring after one of my fights, I always want to say 'Hello, Henry Armstrong' just to let him know I'm not mad at him and that I like him. But I never do it because he and other people might think I'm just trying to rub it in because I won his title."

As for pure enjoyment, Fritzie liked best his second fight with Al (Bummy) Davis, the little Brownsville bully who fouled him 12 consecutive times with low punches before the referee disqualified him. In that second fight, Zivic conscientiously refrained from knocking out Davis until the tenth round. Ringside consensus was that he could have put Davis away in any round of his own choosing, but he preferred to make a gory spectacle of the self-styled tough guy, who, unlike Zivic had never quite learned the trade of prize fighting.

Zivic that night stabbed Davis into a horrible mess before they stopped it. "I was getting an education," said Fritzie. "You should have heard some of the things Bummy was saying to me in the clinches. I'm pretty good at foul language myself, but that Davis is the champ. It's lucky I was the only guy who could hear him, or a lot of people would have fainted around that ringside."

Bummy Looks at Clock

Bummy Davis gave Zivic, in their first fight, the opportunity he had been waiting all his life according to Fritzie. "We're in the first round with about a minute and a half to go, and Bummy turns his head to take a look at the big clock in the Garden. All my life I was hoping somebody I'm fighting would do that. When Bummy turns his head I cold-cock him with a right. What the hell did he expect me to do, back away and go to my corner? If a guy wants to see before time it is when he's fighting, he ought to carry a wrist watch."

Zivic, it seems, has come a long way since he moved into Washington six years ago as just another one of the Fighting Zivics of Pittsburgh, who was supposed to be trading on his brothers' reputation. He got his ears boxed off by smart-jabbing, light-hitting Johnny Jaddick at the old Washington Auditorium for a mere $800 gate. Tomorrow night he'll be fighting for a $3000 guarantee.

He's the only man in history to beat Henry Armstrong twice, and the only man ever to knock Armstrong out. He has won the world welterweight title from the greatest champion the division had seen in a generation, and he lost it within a year to obscure Freddy Cochrane. He wants another fight with Cochrane who, he says is ducking him, and if he can't get Cochrane back into the ring, he's willing to go for Ken Overlin, George Abrams, Billy Soose, Tony Zale or any middleweight who will lay the title on the line. "I hope the big boys won't complain that I'm too rough," adds tough little Fritzie.

Phil Furr and Zivic Put Fighting First

Tomorrow Night's Uline Arena Foes Live the Game; Zivic Is 2-1 Choice

By Tony Neri

Phil Furr, the pride of Foggy Bottom, and Fritzie Zivic, Pittsburgh's great welterweight, who meet tomorrow night in a 10-round encounter at Uline Arena, may be poles apart insofar as personal traits are concerned, but they can boast one thing in common. Both love to fight.

Furr, the swashbuckling former Army cavalryman; and Zivic, the Cinderella man of fistiana, were cut out of the same pattern, apparently, for both are in their glories when doing combat in the squared circle with the feel of resin under their feet and the smell of cigar smoke in their nostrils.

Although there is no love lost between them, both talk the same language—the fight language. Meet Phil Furr and you engage a man who'll give you a tin ear on the subject of prize fights. Meet Fritzie Zivic and he'll have you on the ropes with his verbal hooks and jabs. Fighting is their business and they always talk shop.

No Storm Dodger

Goldie Ahearn, an associate of Matchmaker Johnny Attell, who is staging tomorrow night's show, gives a tipoff into the make-up of Furr. A decade or so back, Ahearn was promoting fights at the Twin City Arena and Furr fought his first pro fight there. In the midst of that fight a thunderstorm broke loose forcing the cash customers to flee to shelter, but not bothering Furr and his opponent, who flailed away at each other while lightning and thunder flashed overhead.

As far as Zivic is concerned, fighting is a natural habit, like eating or sleeping. With him, it is an everyday occurrence, this business of bashing heads. The manly art of self-defense was impressed early on the mind of Fritzie, the youngest of a family of five.

When Phil and Fritzie face tomorrow night before an expected crowd of 6500, the former will find himself on the short end of the odds. The wagering boys, those percentage quotations have installed Zivic the 2-to-1 favorite.

But those odds mean nothing to Furr. He was saying yesterday: "I've been bucking odds all my life and it doesn't bother me. I'm going out there tomorrow night and give Fritzie some of his own medicine. Fritzie holds a win over me and I'm going to get even with him."

Zivic Orates

Zivic wasn't as vociferous in his remarks as Furr, although the Pittsburgher can kazo you with a word barrage with the least provocation. His only assertion yesterday was, "I can't afford to take this Furr too lightly. He's going to give me plenty of trouble, and I can't afford to lose, so he'll know he was in a fight."

Furr finished 1½ hours' drill at the Apollo Club and plans to rest today, while Zivic put in a hard scrimmage in the Catholic University gym.

4 Important Grid Battles Mark Program

By Jack Cuddy.

United Press Sports Writer.
New York, Nov. 24.—The football season makes an end-run to a grand finale this week, with plenty of dynamite sprinkled on four fronts in a quartet of encounters that may be listed as follows:

1. The annual clash between the service academies, Army and Navy, will be staged before the season's largest crowd, 98,497 fans at Philadelphia's Municipal Stadium Saturday. The reason the attendance will be under 100,000 is because service officials requested that temporary stands at the open end of the stadium not be erected this year. Navy will be a heavy favorite, since it was beaten only by Notre Dame and tied by Harvard, whereas Army lost to Harvard and Pennsylvania, was tied by Notre Dame, and barely beat West Virginia. In this forty-second meeting between the two schools, Navy will be trying to win its third straight victory.

State Rivals Meet

2. Oregon State engages Oregon in a neighborhood brawl that will decide the Pacific Northwest conference championship and Western representation in the Rose Bowl. The game will be played at Eugene, Ore., before a capacity crowd. If Oregon State wins this last game of its season it will be recognized as Pacific Coast Champ and Rose Bowl defender, even if Stanford, the lone contender, beats California. The reason being Oregon State's previous victory over Stanford last year's champ and Rose Bowl victor.

3. Championship of the South-

Jones will join Steve Juzwik, of Notre Dame, and Bill De Correvont, of Northwestern, on the Yankee roster in the contest staged for benefit of Jewish, Catholic and Negro charities.

Sugar Bowl's Sweet Words Fail To Move Aloof Fighting Irish

Notre Dame Apparently Wants No Part Of New Orleans Classic; Officials Hopeful

By the Associated Press
New Orleans, Nov. 24 (AP)—The Sugar Bowl, expecting to announce "something pretty soon that will be interesting," still has open arms for Notre Dame, but the Fighting Irish continue cool to the advances.

Contestants for the game will be announced within a week. Asked today if there still was a possibility of Notre Dame's playing here January 1, President A. N. Goldberg of the New Orleans Mid-Winter Sports Association (the Sugar Bowl) said:

"As far as we're concerned, yes. As far as Notre Dame is concerned, I don't know. We haven't heard from them. I've listened to the sports broadcasts and read the sports columns in the newspapers for a hint of their attitude but haven't found anything."

Goldberg made his remarks to the Monday Quarterbacks Club, where the Sugar Bowl head, and football coaches of Tulane and Louisiana State Universities, reply to members' questions.

Goldberg said Mississippi was "one of the teams under considera-

Indiana Star Wins National Cross-Country

By the Associated Press

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 24.—Frederick L. Wilt, slim Indiana University runner, today capped his first "big time" harrier-season-by slipping away from a picked field for an easy individual triumph in the fourth annual national collegiate cross-country championships.

Wilt's victory, however, failed to help Indiana's team title defense in the four-mile event, and Rhode Island State College, compiling 83 points, added the national crown to the I. C. 4-A title it won last week for the second straight year. Wilt was clocked in 20 minutes, 32.3 seconds, a trifle slower than the record-breaking 20:30.2 set by Gilbert Dods of Ashland College last year. But since the 1941 course was altered, Wilt's time established another course and meet record.

Gels Away on Top

Wilt sprinted to the front at the gun, distanced the field by 150 yards at the halfway mark and broke the tape 100 yards ahead of Notre Dame's Oliver Hunter, who was runner-up for the second straight year. Wilt, who came to Indiana University from Indiana Central College this year, also won the 1941 Western Conference Title. The field was bunched behind Hunter, third; Virgil Alston, of Miami (Oxford, Ohio), fourth; David Clutterham, of Cornell (Iowa), fifth; Ralph Monroe, of Michigan State College, sixth; Rol Nichols, of Rhode Island State, seventh; Ed Holderman, of Purdue, eighth; Tony Maloney, of Notre Dame, ninth, and Duane Zemper, of Michigan Normal, tenth.

All 96 entries from 19 schools finished the race staged in 31-degree weather.

Rhode Island's five-point winners placed seventh, seventeenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth. Second in the team standings was Penn State with 110 points, and third was Connecticut with 114.

Purdue's favored Boilermakers set for a disputed fourth-place tie with Michigan State. Officials said movies would be studied to determine the questioned placing. Remainder of the field scored as follows: Notre Dame, sixth, 137 points; Miami, of Oxford, Ohio, 139 points; Indiana, ninth, 177; Illinois, 202; Notre Dame, 203; Butler, twelfth, 333; Oberlin, thirteenth, 335, and Earlham, fourteenth, 380.

'Skins-Packer Game Already a Sell-Out

35,800 Seats Sold; Ticketless Fans Advised to Stay at Home

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Forced into an outcast's role as far as the Eastern Championship of the National Pro League is concerned, the Redskins will nevertheless play to their second full house of the home season against the Green Bay Packers Sunday at Griffith Stadium.

The Redskins management yesterday announced the game had reached sellout proportions as the last of the 35,800 seats were sold early in the afternoon. Those were several hundred of the bad angle and behind the post variety, so marked on the tickets, but despite this they went before noon.

Jack Espey and his force turned down several hundred more applicants in the afternoon and then put seats on sale for the Philadelphia Eagles encounter December 7, the official closing date of the regular league schedule.

Better Stay Away

Fans who do not hold seats to the Packer clash are advised not to go to the stadium Sunday as absolutely every seat in the house has been sold, bleachers included. Green Bay can clinch its share of a Western Division playoff Sunday by beating the Redskins, while the Bears have the Philadelphia Eagles and Chicago Cardinals remaining on the schedule and must beat both to deadlock the Packers—if the Redskins win Sunday.

The Packers will remain on the road this week. They went to New York yesterday morning after routing the Pittsburgh Steelers, 54-7, on Sunday, and will stay at the New York Athletic Club, with workouts scheduled in Central Park.

Curly Lambeau will bring the five-time league champs here on Friday and work out on the Georgetown University field Friday and Saturday afternoons, starting at noon. They will stay at the Ambassador Hotel.

While the Chicago Bears have been monopolizing the headlines this year with their assault on the league records, the Packers have

Reds to Open Spring Camp Week Earlier

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Nov. 24.—The Cincinnati Reds will open their spring training program next year practically in midwinter, General Manager Warren C. Giles announced today.

Giles said the team will play two less exhibition games next year and that pitchers and catchers will report to the Tampa, Fla., headquarters Friday, February 20, a week earlier than last year. The rest of the squad will report on or before February 27 to start preparing for 32 Grapefruit games, including the annual tour North with the Boston Red Sox.

The first game will be against the Cleveland Indians on March 9 at Tampa, and from then until April 12, when the Reds make their usual preseason debut with the Detroit Tigers at Cincinnati, there are but four open dates.

The three final games with Detroit will be played April 10 at Ashland, Ky.; April 11 at Dayton, Ohio, and April 12 at home.

Other Florida opponents will include the St. Louis Cardinals, the New York Yankees, the New York Giants, the Dodgers, the Boston Braves, and the Washington Senators.

Yale Picks Moseley as 1942 Captain

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 24.—Spencer D. Moseley, of Highland, Ill., Yale's broken-jaw center and son of an All-American on Walter Camp's 1916 eleven, today was chosen to lead the Elis' 1942 football team.

Moseley, 22-year-old, rangy "iron man" successor of Capt. Alan Bartholmey, of Portland, Ore., played all but a few moments in every contest this season despite a broken jaw.

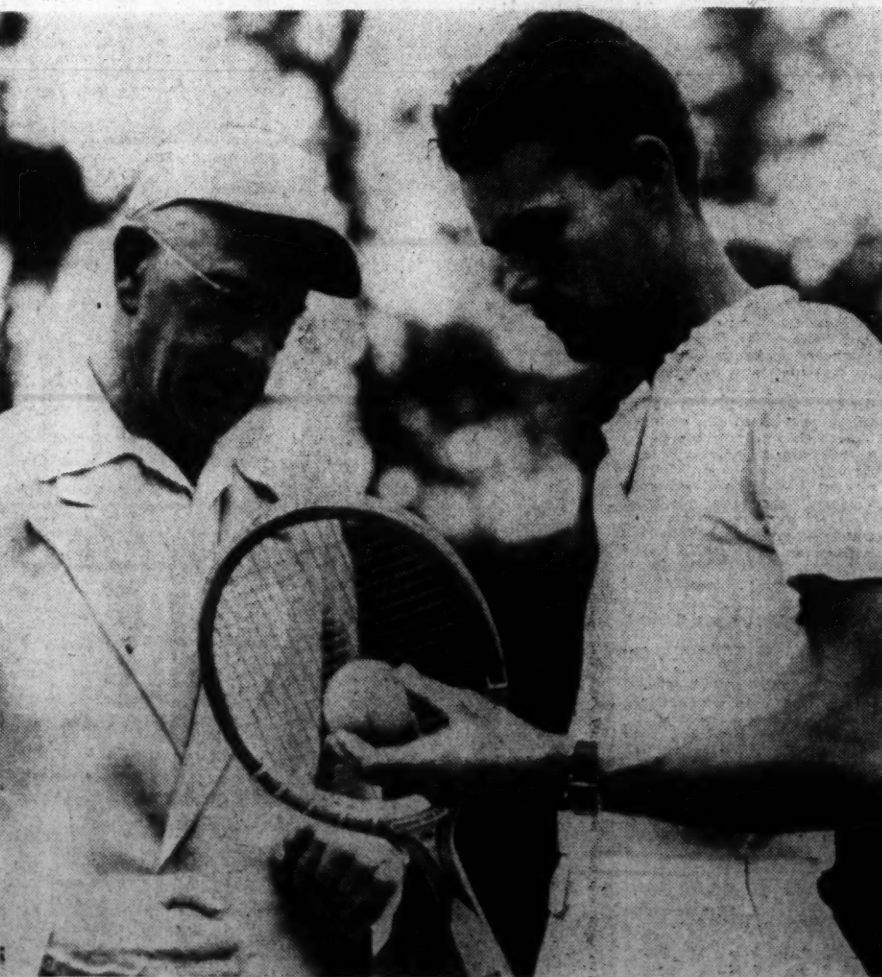

George C. Moseley, the father of the new Yale gridiron leader, played end on one of Yale's greatest eleven. His son takes over at a time when football here is at an all-time low and with prospects for improvement none too good.

For two consecutive seasons, Yale has won only one out of eight games. Last year it was victorious over Dartmouth. This year it beat Virginia in the opening fray.

Moseley and Spike Nelson, the first non-Yale graduate head coach, said today they were far from dismayed over the 1942 schedule.

Moseley's team must face Lehigh, Pennsylvania, Navy, Dartmouth, Brown, Cornell, Princeton and Harvard in that order next fall. Yale wound up the current season last Saturday by taking a 14-0 trouncing from Harvard.

All-State Stars Dot Richmond's Line-up for Bowl Game

Metro Team Holds Drill At Stadium

Jack Itner, Saxby, Baughan Among Stars Of School Elevens For Saturday Game

By Bill Burnett
They won't pack quite the weight of Washington's representatives, but Richmond's scholastic all-stars, which will compete in the seventh annual Tobacco Bowl at Richmond Saturday will lack nothing in talent, it is advanced word from the Virginia city is not too optimistic.

Among the stars of John Marshall and Thomas Jefferson High Schools, who turned out for their first drill yesterday, were several of the best players in the State, by popular agreement. And testifying to the Richmonders' ability is the fact that the two schools were undefeated except for an interschool 6-0 defeat handed the Jeffs by John Marshall in their annual clash.

A big part in that crucial victory was credited to Jack Itner, a 192-pound tackle who will be one of the heaviest foes of the All-Metro eleven. Itner is only a junior this year, but he is almost certain of All-State mention such as he reaped in his sophomore year.

Saxby's Threat
A big backfield threat—though comparatively slight in stature—will be J. M. Ed Saxby, a 170-pounder who also was an All-State selection last season. To Saxby went the Richmond city scoring championship this year, his plunging and spinning moving one of the features of city play.

From the Thomas Jefferson squad will come Ervin Baughan, a 162-pound tailback who has been called the best all-round back in Richmond. His passing kept T. J. up there all year. A curious thing about it was his ability to hurl the ball on a dead run.

On the line the outstanding T. J. player will probably be Wilmer Traynor, a center who tips the scales at only 138 pounds but makes up for it in aggressiveness. Traynor backs up the line on the defense, was one of Thomas Jefferson's captains.

O'Leary Called Away
On the local front the All-Metro squad yesterday held another lengthy drill at Griffith Stadium. Three absentees, particularly worried Coach Gene Augusterfer, who supervised action.

The main one was Coach Jim O'Leary, Augusterfer's aide. O'Leary will miss all further workouts as well as Saturday's game since his departure yesterday morning for Texas, where his mother is seriously ill.

Elmer Raba and "Reds" Murphy, Gonzaga High backfield aces, also were among the missing, the first resting a sore knee and Murphy overcoming a stiff neck. Both will be back in uniform today, however, when practice starts promptly at 3:30.

Indians Meet Wolfpack, Seek Share of Title

Special Dispatch to The Post
Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 24.—All-ready co-champions of the State by Virginia—by virtue of their conquest of Richmond last week—William and Mary's Indian elevens need only a triumph over N. C. State here this Saturday to clinch a half share in the Southern Conference title with Duke.

The Tribesmen will close what so far has been a highly successful campaign against the Wolfpack. In nine games thus far William and Mary has been beaten only by a powerful Navy team.

Coach Carl Voyles' ground-minded eleven lists among its victims Virginia Tech, George Washington, Dartmouth, V. M. I. and Richmond. Other teams which fell before the Tribes' power were Appellate School, Randolph-Macon and Hampden-Sydney.

The Tribesmen emerged from the game with Richmond with a minimum of injuries, none of which are considered serious, and should be at peak strength for N. C. State. The only regular definitely out of the game is Doc Holloway, right guard, who was injured in the V. M. I. fracas.

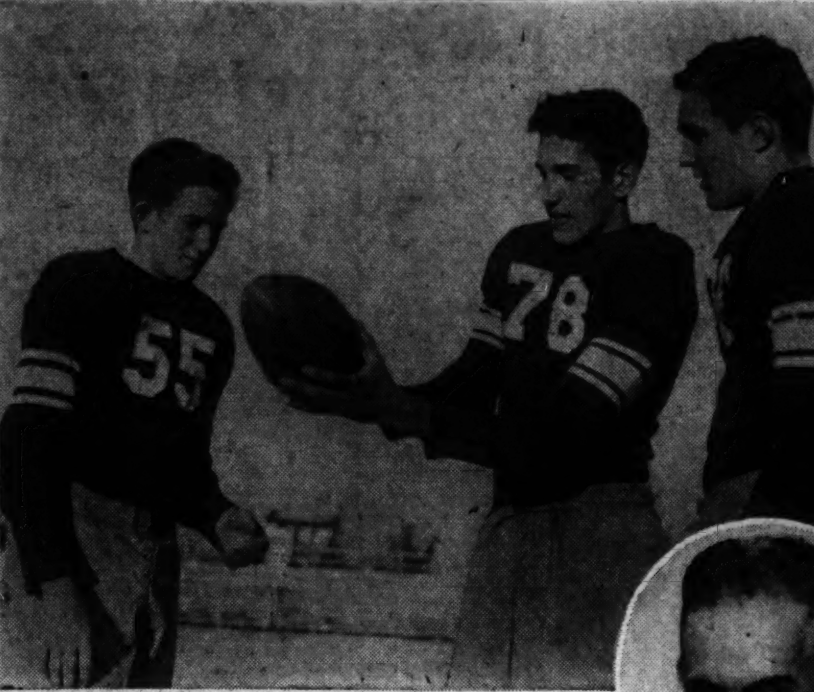

Four William and Mary seniors—Capt. Bill Goodlow, Jimmy Howard, Harle Masters and Jim Hickey—will be playing their final game for the Indians this week. Goodlow, Howard and Masters are regular starters, and Hickey is a first-line reserve at fullback.

N. C. State and William and Mary played last year in a night game at Norfolk, and Coach Doc Newton's deceptive attack was too much for the Indians, the Wolfpack winning, 16 to 6.

Spartans Warned Of Mountaineers
East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 24 (AP).—Michigan State's Spartans, who have scored 77 points in their last two games, were told today to forget the new-found power in preparing for West Virginia's Mountaineers.

West Virginia is the toughest, hardest-playing outfit I've seen all year," Scout Joe Holsinger reported. The Spartans and Mountaineers meet Saturday at Morgantown, W. Va.

Trio of Wing Threats to All-Metro Eleven

On the Line

With CONSIDINE
WHAT INTERESTS YOU, BUDDY?

BOXING?—Lou Nova is through with yoga and cosmic forces that proved so uncooperative the night Joe Louis' overhand right, no respecter of fancy phrases, flattened him dimly. At least that's what Lou's manager, Ray Carlen, has assured us.

"When Nova gets back from his trip to Guatemala I'm going to put him right in a gym and we're going back to fundamentals. No more fancy stuff. Yeah, I read where Professor Walston Brown said that Nova would be fully under his wing the next time he fights, instead of only part way. That just isn't true. I think the professor did help Lou a little, especially on his balance. But enough's enough. Lou must redeem himself in the eyes of the boxing public, and not with theories."

CONSIDINE P. S.—Nova's comeback program will start in January when he meets Light-Heavyweight Champion Gus Lesnevich.

P. P. S.—Ken Overlin could lick both of them.

PRO FOOTBALL?—George Marshall once said that the two greatest things that ever happened to pro football were (1) Sammy Baugh and (2) Dr. John Bain Sutherland. After watching Sunday's classic between the Giants and Redskins, we appreciate the order in which Marshall named the game's benefactors.

Baugh is an electrifying force, made doubly magnetic by the fact that he performs wonders in face of the other team's exact knowledge of what he is going to do. He completes passes against masterfully engineered defenses, and moves mountains of flesh up and down the field with a thin, bony right arm that is like a whip on the backs of omen. If there is a Babe Ruth in pro football—a personality who is never lost in the shuffle—it is indisputably Baugh.

TENNIS?—The new angel of pro tennis, as dead as the Davis Cup, is to be young Alexis Thompson, owner of the Philadelphia Eagles. Over the mild objections of the Wilson Sporting Goods Co., which has been a great friend of Bobby Riggs during the active little guy's long career as an amateur, Thompson has signed Riggs to a pro contract. He will go on tour this winter and spring with Don Budge, Fred Perry and Bill Tilden. Riggs won't provide the lure that Frank Kovacs would, for Kovacs has a lot of negotiable eccentricities. But tennis people won't want much more than a sight of Budge trying to make a comeback against the man who ended his reign as pro champ, Perry. And of course, Tilden will pack interest until he is 50, or rather, 60, for he'll be 60 on February 12.

Incidentally, the tennis mob is in a mild dither over action of the Florida State Association, long-time ally of the United States Lawn Tennis Association. The Florida people want to secede. They say that Californians dominated the national tennis body and that said Californians jammed through the traveling and expense account restraining clauses which will keep a lot of the fancy Dans out of big Florida amateur tournaments this winter.

BASERBALL?—The Mohammeds of the game are going to emulate the prophet himself by going to Keweenaw Mountain. Old Judge Landis, sickly rickety from that hospital siege, will sit in Chicago and the annual winter baseball meeting, scheduled for New York, will go to him. On the surface it looks like a tribute to the old guy. But facts are that the owners sensibly realize that a winter meeting without Landis to crack down on the crackpots would hardly be accepted by the baseball public as official.

The big topic at the winter meeting will be that veteran bone of contention—the major-minor agreement. Landis wants to cut into the serfdom of minor leaguers and make their major league operators stop shuttling them back and forth between the big and the little leagues. If their original big league owners don't want them, after a tryout in the big show, Landis believes that other big league teams should have a chance to hire them. He'll get his way, too, you can bet on that.

'Skins' Kreuger May Be Inducted January 1

Al Kreuger, the promising young Redskins back, has exchanged telegrams with his Palmdale, Calif., draft board and has deferred his Army induction date until January 1, he disclosed yesterday.

Kreuger was originally ordered to report December 3, but he asked a month's deferment in order to complete the football schedule.

The 22-year-old Southern California graduate passed his physical examination before reporting to the Redskins training camp and was classified 1A. He was married August 23, just before reporting for practice.

Kreuger will take up the matter of a possible deferment when he returns to California after the Eagle game December 7. He was held out of the first few games, but has stayed in the last four and in the Brooklyn and New York games caught important passes.

Ferrara Loses 8-Round Decision

New York, Nov. 24 (AP).—Francisco Montaneri, 146, Genoa, Italy, scored an eight-round decision over Tony Ferrara, 147½, Mount Vernon, N. Y., in a rough feature bout at St. Nicholas Palace tonight. Montaneri piled up an early lead and was never headed.

Tony suffered a slight cut along the right eye in the second round. Montaneri lost the third round for illegal punching. There were no knockdowns.

Brentwood Meets

The Brentwood Eagles are requested to report to Boots Souder at his home tomorrow night at 8 o'clock to make plans for the coming court season.

Art Lessard May Start for Eagles Tonight

As the result of a compromise suggested by President Tom Lockhart of the Eastern Hockey League, the Washington Eagles and Baltimore Orioles appear to be nearing an armistice in their warfare over giant defenseman Art Lessard.

Indications are that Lessard will be in the starting line-up of the Eagles tonight when they open their 1941-42 hostilities against their fiery intercity rival, the Orioles, at Riverdale Stadium, 8:30 o'clock.

Lockhart yesterday asked Owner S. G. Loeffler, of the Eagles, if he would withdraw his protest regarding Baltimore's playing of Defenseman Frank Gresnick and Winger George Kowuniemi, recently released to the Orioles by the Washington Lions, if the Orioles in turn would surrender title to Lessard.

"I'll be glad to do it because I know the Orioles are short of players and also because they're our hottest rival and best drawing card," Loeffler said. "If Baltimore can have both players reinstated in time for tomorrow night's game with us it's all right with Red Mackenzie and myself."

It is believed that Lockhart made this move after conferring with Baltimore officials, and that an effort will be made to reinstate these players, badly needed by the Orioles, at the earliest possible moment.

In the event Gresnick and Kowuniemi are made immediately available to the Orioles, the unpredictable Eagles will go into tonight's game a short-handed.

Fox Pro Five Wins Garden Final, 42 to 39

By International News Service
New York, Nov. 24.—Twentieth Century-Fox rumbled down the Madison Square Garden Court tonight in a garrison finish to win the Golden Jubilee Basketball tournament from the Phillips 66 five, 42 to 39.

Leading most of the way, the Hollywood National A. A. U. champions found themselves headed in the last three minutes, and then staged the exciting comeback that turned the blood pressure of 9133 spectators.

The tournament marked the formal opening of a basketball season dedicated to the memory of Dr. James A. Naismith, who devised the game at Springfield, Mass., in 1891. The film five was awarded the Dr. Naismith plaque as a token of their triumph.

Luissetti Hurt
Proceeds of the meet were turned over to a committee that expects to construct a temple of basketball at Springfield in memory of the late "father of the game."

Fox from the A. A. U. title tourney, the teams battled and brawled to the last whistle, and, in the process Hank Luissetti, Phillips ace, went to the sidelines with a cartilage ripped in his knee.

Elbows, knees and clenched fists flailed the air with such frequency that six players, three on each team, found themselves disqualified on fouls at the finish.

Twentieth Century picked up the lead in the early minutes. They were ahead 20-14 at half-time.

Beware of Stationary Rabbits! If the Cottontail Doesn't Run—You'd Better, Doctor Allows

Rabbit Fever Can Be Transmitted To Hunters Who Don't Watch Out

By the Associated Press
Baltimore, Nov. 24.—Be a good sport—and a healthy one—and shoot only the darting rabbit that can run away from you rather than the sluggish cottontail.

That's the advice to hunters from Dr. R. H. Riley, director of the State department of health, who said today: "Beware that the open season for wild rabbits does not also become the open season for tularemia."

Dr. Riley declared, "this serious disease, which is widely known as rabbit fever, is usually transmitted to human beings through contact with infected wild rabbits, or with the infected insects that spread it from one animal to another."

"Once the rabbit has been shot or trapped, all who handle the game—hunters, market men and those who prepare the meat for the table—should make every effort to avoid possible infection," the director stated, adding:

"True, not all animals are infected, for only about 1 per cent of the wild ones are believed to be sources of the disease, and so far those bred in sanitary rabbitries—the only kind that can be sold legally in Baltimore City—have been found to be free from the infection. However, it is safest to assume that every rabbit is a source of danger, and to take necessary precautions."

Dr. Riley's precaution prescription is: "Don't handle the animal or unfected, for only about 1 per cent of the wild ones are believed to be sources of the disease, and so far those bred in sanitary rabbitries—the only kind that can be sold legally in Baltimore City—have been found to be free from the infection. Hoyas Boast Big Advantage Over Xavier

Cincinnati, Nov. 24.—A modern version of the battle of "David and Goliath" will be exemplified when the Xavier University Musketeers meet the Georgetown University Hoyas in an inter-sectional game Saturday afternoon.

The Hoyas, coming to Cincinnati for the opening of grid relations with Xavier, boast a line averaging 206 pounds and a variety of versatile backs whose weight averages 182.

Jim Arata, Xavier's junior tackle, carrying 205, is the topmost of Crowe's men. The bean, scales downward to Joe Rusche, junior back, who weighs a scant 163.

Georgetown has some real giants in its fold with Ross Sorce, junior tackle at 275, and Al Bloria, another tackle at 246, heading the corps of "giants."

The Hoyas backs, comparing more favorably with the Musketeer ball-carriers in weight, have the best of it in height. Five Georgetown men being 6 feet or better while only three of the Xavier backs can hit that mark.

Coach Crowe, who has piloted the Musketeers to eight victories out of nine starts this season, piling up 243 points against 41 for the Georgetown and registering four straight shut-outs, believes he "must cut his cloth to fit the pattern."

In Crowe's book this is translated into one thing: Try to outsmart the opposition, go the limit in deception and shoot the works aerially.

Layden Calls Meeting to Map Play-Off Plan
By the Associated Press
New York, Nov. 24.—Elmer Layden, commissioner of the National Pro Football League, will meet at Philadelphia next Monday with officials of the teams involved to draft plans for the championship playoffs, it was announced today.

The New York Giants clinched the Eastern title by beating Washington yesterday. The Western division leaders, Green Bay and the Chicago Bears, can finish in a tie if Green Bay wins its one remaining game and the Bears win their two. In that case these two would have to meet in a sectional playoff to determine which would play the Giants for the pro title.

Since the last regularly-scheduled games are listed for December 7, this could stretch the pro season to December 21. In that case some close connections would have to be made, for the league champions and a squad of league all-stars are booked to be in Los Angeles December 28 for an exhibition game.

Newspaper advertising placed by retailers in 84 major cities during the week ended Nov. 15 totaled $2,969,893 lines, up fractionally from the $2,886,293 lines carried during the corresponding week of last year, according to Advertising Age.

For the 46-week period since the beginning of the year, newspapers in the measured cities have printed a total of 985,092,732 lines of retail display advertising, compared with 950,477,058 for the corresponding period of 1940, an increase of 3.4 per cent.

A. & P. Gives Part Pay to Employees In Armed Forces

New York, Nov. 24 (AP)—The more than 2800 soldiers and sailors who worked for the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. at the time of their entrance into military service are receiving compensation from the company at the rate of $700,000 a year in addition to their regular Government pay, John A. Hartford, president, said today.

In many instances, Hartford said, the check from the company is twice the amount of the man's base military pay. A military compensation plan provides A. & P. employees in service with 20 per cent of their business salary in monthly installments, Hartford explained. All qualified full-time and part-time employees working more than 30 hours a week were made eligible for compensation not to exceed $100 a month. The company also assumed payment of premiums on the group insurance policies held by the men.

Steel Production Shows Minor Dip Despite Strike

New York, Nov. 24 (AP)—The nation's steel mills will operate this week at 95.9 per cent of capacity, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported today, the rate showing only a slight drop from last week's 97 per cent despite impact of the captive coal mine strike.

A month ago operations were at 99.3 per cent of capacity, and a year ago at 96.8 per cent.

Effect of the coal stoppage was cushioned to some extent, steel circles said, by the action of the one leading company in shutting down a number of furnaces for repairs. Another factor tending to limit the influence of the strike was the fact that many of the steel producers were able to draw upon coal stockpiles.

C. & O. Asks Bids On Erie Holdings

Cleveland, Nov. 24 (AP)—Contributing a policy of divesting itself of investments in several railroads in which it once was interested, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co. today invited bids on $11,000 shares of Erie Railroad common, 6000 shares of first preferred and 2000 shares of second preferred.

These certificates of deposit represent stock of Erie Railroad Co. before reorganization, the new securities provided in the reorganization plan not having been issued yet, said the C. & O., which controlled Erie before the line was unable to meet its financial obligations several years ago.

The C. & O. likewise invited bids on 10,000 shares of Chicago Great Western Railway Co. common. The deadline in each case was set for December 2.

U. S. Guidance of Capital Flow Advocated

Gerson Purcell, Securities and Exchange commissioner, suggested yesterday an intergovernmental committee to streamline "corporate structures and financial conditions for defense as well as postwar needs."

Purcell, in an address prepared for delivery before the Economic Club of Detroit, said "it seems most unwise not to initiate now some temporary measures to conserve and direct the flow of capital beyond that which can be obtained solely by allocation and priorities of materials."

Such a program, Purcell said, should be closely interlocked with the general emergency program.

"That there is no shortage of capital here is indeed in itself a very debatable point, when one considers the enormous cost of our defense effort," the commissioner commented.

It is clearly apparent that the joint guidance of the various Government agencies will be needed in order to let industry know whether the specific financing programs which it contemplates during the emergency are proper in view of the increasingly pertinent economic realities."

He said the SEC already was working "in a very small way" toward the guidance of investment capital by including in registration statement information as to whether materials or labor will be available for the purposes specified by the registrant.

"Unless the investor is given this protection of disclosure of these important facts," Purcell explained, "his savings are apt to be diverted from national defense into an enterprise which is unable to put his cash to work."

Purcell illustrated another phase of the SEC's current job by telling how "two vital but shaky operating companies have transformed into sound companies with clean corporate structures capable of financing any further expansion which the defense program may require."

Approving the tendency of some companies to refinance outstanding debt issues, Purcell said many could reduce if not completely eliminate debt from their corporate structures.

"This they should do," he commented, "and if it is not done voluntarily, the Government—preferably through the medium of an interdepartmental group—should be in a position to require that it be done where refinancing plans are in process."

Supreme Court to Review Hardwood Trust Case

The Justice Department was granted a Supreme Court review yesterday of a decision by the Federal District Court at New York dismissing an antitrust charge brought against ten manufacturers of hardwood materials alleged to have monopolized the hardwood industry.

Urging the Supreme Court to pass on the controversy, Solicitor General Charles Fahy said the Masonite Corporation, manufacturer of more than 90 per cent of the hardwood produced in this country, had entered into agreements with the other concerns which restrained interstate commerce.

The Justice Department contended the agreements were illegal because "they were and are the means whereby the defendants fixed the price, terms, and conditions of sale for hardwood and designated the market and class of customers to which each would sell.

"They were the means whereby the defendants attempted to and did monopolize the hardwood industry."

Other defendants were listed as follows: Celotex Corporation, Certain-teed Products Corporation, John-Manville Sales Corporation, Inland Paper Co., National Gypsum Co., Wood Conversion Co., Armstrong Cork Co., and Dant & Russell, Inc.

Bank Loans in 101 Cities Show Dip

The Federal Reserve Board said yesterday that commercial, industrial and agricultural loans of banks in 101 leading cities declined one million dollars to a total of $3,632,000,000 in the week ended November 18.

The course of these loans has been irregular the last few weeks, but the trend has been upward for more than a year, and the total of these loans in the 101 cities on November 18 was $1,724,000,000 higher than on the corresponding date last year.

Also the Federal Reserve Board reported holiday and midmonth business boosted check transactions to $12,633,000,000 in 274 leading cities during the week ended November 18.

The board said the figure was about one-third higher than the $9,070,000,000 of the preceding week, but explained that the earlier week contained one less business day on account of Armistice Day and also fell in between the first and fifteenth of the month when customary payroll checks swell the volume.

In the corresponding week last year the total was $10,284,000,000.

Bank Credit Expands For Defense Orders

New York, Nov. 24 (AP)—Use of bank credit for defense orders showed a substantial expansion in the three months ended September 30, the American Bankers Association reported today.

A survey by the association disclosed that 278 banks in 146 cities had $1,785,584,174 of defense loans outstanding at the end of the third quarter, an increase of more than 400 million over the total on June 30.

Answers to Quiz
 1. Holding a hand which looks good only for a part-score, North should not say three clubs, which would indicate a strong hand. His wisest call is two hearts. Of course, South might have a better fit in clubs than in hearts, but it is better for North to play a risky two-heart contract than to go to the three level on just the possibility of finding a club fit.
 2. South's bidding shows he is interested in a game contract and North, with four hearts and the ace, queen of diamonds, has ample values for a four-heart call. Three hearts would be a sign-off, merely showing that North preferred hearts to clubs.

400,000 Move Up for 2d Battle Of Carolinas

By a Staff Correspondent

With First Army in the field, Nov. 24—Nearly 400,000 men of the First Army and the Fourth Army Corps began taking positions tonight from which they will move tomorrow morning to the second great battle of the Carolinas.

Their field bivouacs, lightless and fireless, offered them cold comfort tonight as the mercury slowly dropped after a balmy Sunday. Outposts along the Monroe-Wadesboro-Rockingham Highway, the "international boundary" between Northern Blues and Southern Reds, shivered for dawn to bring action and warmth.

As they faced each other tonight, the forces were virtually the same as those which fought across the Pee Dee River last week. First Army, commanded by Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, contains the First, Second and Sixth Corps, Army and corps units and the First Air Support Command. Fourth Corps, commanded by Maj. Gen. O. W. Griswold, consists of the Fourth, Thirty-first and Forty-third Infantry Divisions, reinforced by the First and Second Armored Divisions and combat aviation.

The chief differences are that Gen. Drum's force is supported by two squadrons of medium bombers, a type of aviation it did not have last week and whose absence it found costly.

21 Meet Death In Nine Days Of Maneuvers

By a Staff Correspondent

Monroe, N. C.—Since nearly 400,000 men started the Army's climatic maneuver nine days ago, 21 have been killed in accidents on both sides. Of these, 16 died in motor mishaps, 5 in two crashes Sunday.

In addition, 4000 men were evacuated to hospitals as actual casualties from accidents or illness. Another 6000 were taken from the front as simulated casualties.

Of those killed, three died when a truck overturned Sunday afternoon and two were drowned when the automobile in which they were riding hurtled into a creek. One soldier was killed by a civilian automobile while walking on a highway.

A man was killed when the heavy tractor on which he was riding, drawing a 155-millimeter gun, overturned. Another was killed by the crash of his scout car with a tank in a blackout, and one was crushed under a tank in the darkness.

Death came to one soldier from a blank cartridge which was discharged against his head when he fell on his rifle. One man was killed when his motorcycle crashed into a truck and another was electrocuted in an unexplained manner. None of the above were in District or Twenty-ninth Division or Fort Meade outfits.

Tank Methods In War Games Ruled Sound

By Marshall Andrews, A Staff Correspondent

Monroe, N. C.—Tank-fighting methods developed by the First Field Army proved themselves sound in last week's maneuvers, Lieut. Gen. Lesley J. McNair, chief of staff of general headquarters, told a news conference here today.

So effective were these defenses, Gen. McNair said, that the opposing Fourth Corps lost more tanks in action against them than it had at the outset of the maneuver. In effect, he said, the two armored divisions, with a total of 800 tanks in action, lost 983 and kept going by nightly replacements.

The First Armored Division was "substantially destroyed," he said, and the Second Armored Division was bottled up and split into feeble elements by Army, corps and division tank units thrown into the fight. This was made possible, Gen. McNair added, by the fact that First Army had 4000 guns of all types for use against tanks and had more than 700 in mobile tank fighter outfits.

"Lack of massed guns in France," he said, was a major cause of the disaster there. In Russia, the Russian inferiority in tanks was increased when tanks had to be used to fight tanks instead of guns being used to stop tanks and the Russian tanks saved for counterattack. That is the situation we are trying to avoid."

Air Losses Large

What successes were achieved in the air were won at tremendous cost, far more than an army could have afforded in actual combat. Losses in some air force units were above 200 per cent, Gen. McNair explained, crediting these high losses largely to lack of tactical experience on the part of pilots who flew too low above heavy anti-aircraft defenses.

"The maneuver," he said, "developed the most complete and informing action seen in the United States thus far. Certainly the armored units were kept busy—if anything, too much so for well-coordinated, concerted action. The handling of the armored elements was uniformly bold and aggressive; the vitally essential offensive spirit was ever present."

Infantry Support Fails

Lack of infantry support of the armored divisions, he added, cost them the advantage of their swift and heavy striking power. This action contrasted, he said, with that of the German tanks across the Meuse to Aachen in May, 1940, when "the long finger created by tanks was backed by a mass of German infantry divisions which the combined efforts of the French and British could not break."

In the maneuver just completed, Gen. McNair said, 91 per cent of the tanks put out of action fell before guns, mines got 3 per cent, aviation 1 per cent and foot troops 3 per cent, hurled by foot troops 3 per cent.

Despite lack of training in combined maneuvers between ground and air forces, air-ground coordination was "excellent for the type of equipment the Air Corps has." Communication, while not good, was much better than in the Louisiana maneuvers.

Violations of rules and conventions were criticized by McNair as indicating "a lack of discipline and, back of that, inadequate leadership." He called attention to cases in which officers had used their rank to veto unfavorable decisions of umpires. "Smoke bottles," he said, "still are being thrown, in one case with the loss of an eye. Flour sacks have been found to contain rocks as well as flour, and were thrown at persons instead of vehicles. Blackout conditions are flaunted in the face of military police."

"And to make the picture more depressing, it is known that, in some cases at least, officers are well aware of conditions, if indeed they themselves are not offenders. No great fighting force can be built on such a foundation."

Tank Destroyers Stationed at Meade

Headquarters of the Army's new Tank Destroyer forces will be temporarily established at Fort George G. Meade, Md., to permit the development of this newest "blitz" arm to begin immediately.

Lieut. Col. Andrew D. Bruce, commander of the "Tank Destroyer Tactical and Firing Center," who will handle the development of anti-tank forces, will soon move from the War Department to Fort Meade, officials said. There he will begin organization of his staff and start experiments in the field.

No decision has been made as to the permanent site of the center, but it is expected that an area much farther from Washington will be chosen.

Free Press Guards 4 Freedoms, Says Typothetae Head

The four freedoms enunciated by President Roosevelt can be guaranteed only through the preservation of a fifth freedom—freedom of the press—members of the local Graphic Arts Association were told yesterday.

Otis H. Johnson, newly elected president of the United Typothetae of America, in an address before the association declared:

"Without freedom of printing, the freedom from want, the freedom from fear, the freedoms of worship and of speech are quickly lost. There never has been and there never can be freedom, as we know the term, unless there exists the free printing press."

The speaker referred to the 60,000 printing plants and the more than 900,000 employees who man the establishments as the real guardians of our democracy.

Johnson's service to the organization was lauded in tributes paid by Clark R. Long, assistant director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; A. E. Giegengack, public printer; and John J. Deviny, deputy public printer.

Jewish Congress Hears Hot Denial They Started War

Baltimore, Nov. 24 (AP)—Dr. M. L. Perlzweig, chairman of the British section of the World Jewish Congress, declaring the Jews did not seek the present war, said today that "it is scarcely necessary, with the long record of Nazi aggression before us, to seek to demonstrate the falsity of the accusation that we instigated it."

Speaking before the first Inter-American Jewish conference, attended by delegates from 18 American countries, Dr. Perlzweig said: "Those who repeat this accusation become the instrument of the propaganda of the foulest form of organized human villainy which the world has known in modern times. 'If we are open to any accusation, it is that we lacked the vision to mobilize, until it was too late, the spiritual and material forces with which alone we could have met the challenge of a high and perilous destiny with honor and self respect.'"
